(6) Windmill.—Logan v. Greer, 136 S.E. 165, 36 Ga.App. 200.

been held not to be a part of the realty.[31]

Motive power. Articles furnishing the motive power of a factory or machine shop, etc., such as engines and boilers,[32] and water wheels, with the attachments thereto,[33] have been regarded as part of the realty, so as to be covered by a conveyance or mortgage thereof, although occasionally engines and boilers have been held to be personalty.[34]

Shafting, belting, and gearing connecting machinery with the motive power have usually been held to be part of the realty.[35]

Other machinery and apparatus, distinct from that furnishing or transmitting motive power, have perhaps, in the majority of cases, been regarded as a part of the realty for the purpose of a conveyance or mortgage,[36] although there are also deci-

Articles in theater

(1) Seats, electric fans, picture machine, pipe organ, and drop curtain, attached to theater, were "fixtures."—Alwes v. Richheimer, 47 S.W.2d 1084, 185 Ark. 535.

(2) Theater curtains and scenery were part of realty. Filley v. Christopher, 80 P. 834, 39 Wash. 22, 109 Am.S.R. 853.

(3) Real estate mortgagee was entitled to chairs attached by screws to floor of theater building situated on realty covered by mortgage, as against holder of subsequently executed chattel mortgage on chairs, notwithstanding part of consideration of debt secured by chattel mortgage was used in payment of balance due on debt secured by conditional sales contract of chairs, since there was no subrogation of holder of chattel mortgage to lien of conditional seller.—Kapsemalis v. Douglas, 61 P.2d 211, 177 Okl. 522.

Railroad rails and switches, spiked down as they must be in railroad building, are attached to the soil, and, under Puerto Rico Civ.Code § 335, become a part of the realty, and subject to any mortgage, which may cover the realty.—Lee v. Koppel Industrial Car & Equipment Co., C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 295 F. 23, certiorari denied Koppel Industrial Car & Equipment Co. v. Lee, 44 S.Ct. 459, 265 U.S. 584, 68 L.Ed. 1191.

Machinery need not be specifically mortgaged to be covered by lien of mortgage on industrial plant.—Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh v. Harkins, 167 A. 278, 312 Pa. 402.

Fact that some of machinery was detachably connected with engines and that parts were detachable from each other was not determinative of issue whether machinery constituted part of realty.—Willis v. Beeler, C.C.A.Ohio, 90 F.2d 538, certiorari denied 58 S.Ct. 38, 302 U.S. 717, 82 L.Ed. 554—Schumacher v. Beeler, C.C.A.Ohio, 90 F.2d 538, certiorari denied 58 S.Ct. 38, 302 U.S. 717, 82 L. Ed. 554.

Fact that machinery in mortgaged plant was covered by unexpired patents, and, therefore, could not be used does not affect lien of mortgage thereon.—Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh v. Harkins, 167 A. 278, 312 Pa. 402.

sions in which machinery and apparatus of various kinds have been held to be personalty, by reason of the mode of annexation and the character and use of the articles.[37]

Machinery and appliances on farms or plantations have not infrequently been held to be part of the realty for the purpose of a conveyance or mortgage.[38]

Buildings and other structures have usually been regarded as part of the realty and so covered by a conveyance or mortgage thereon,[39] although under particular circumstances they may constitute per-

Electric lighting plant

(1) Held part of realty.—Frederick v. Smith, 111 So. 847, 147 Miss. 437.

(2) Held not part of realty.—Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. v. Chapman, 282 N.W. 355, 225 Iowa 988.

Pumps

(1) Five and six inch centrifugal pumps, annexed to land, and a ten horsepower electric motor as a part of the pumping system, which was sometimes detached from one pump and moved to, and connected with, another part of the system, but which was never disconnected or removed from the land, which pumps and motor were essential to the irrigation and drainage of the land, were fixtures.—First State & Savings Bank v. Oliver, 198 P. 920, 101 Or. 42.

(2) Where intention of owners to make centrifugal pumps a permanent part of irrigation system on ranch was disclosed by manner of installation of the pumps which were placed on concrete foundations, and were inclosed in specially constructed pump houses, and the pumps became an integral part of an interconnected irrigation system without which the ranch could not be operated, the pumps were "fixtures" and were covered by mortgage on the realty, and the fact that pumps were removed on one occasion for purpose of being overhauled and then put back in place did not establish an intention that installation of the pumps was not to be permanent.—Bell v. Bank of Perris, 125 P.2d 829, 52 Cal.App. 2d 66.

Particular buildings

(1) House and garage on lot, occupied by husband and wife.—Glasgow v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., Civ.App., 117 S.W.2d 888, affirmed John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 141 S.W.2d 942, 135 Tex. 470.

(2) Service stations standing on lands leased for term of years.—Standard Oil Co. of California v. Idaho Community Oil Co., 37 P.2d 660, 98 Mont. 131.

Asphalt plant, including smokestack sixty-three feet high, two large horizontal oil tanks mounted on concrete foundations extending below frost line and connected with rest of plant by pipe lines in concrete ducts two and a half feet below ground surface, and other equipment supported by concrete foundations, so that removal of concrete pillars, foundation, driveways, and sidings would damage land itself, as would also removal of building, constituted "real property," covered by realty mortgage.—Petition of Johns-Manville Sales Corporation, C.C.A.Mich., 88 F.2d 520.

Building on piers

(1) As between mortgagor and mortgagee under real estate mortgage, buildings supported by piers and posts were fixtures.—Schmidt v. Carrol, 231 N.W. 181, 201 Wis. 631.

(2) Dance hall constructed by mortgagor on piers on farm became a fixture.—Van Buren v. Gallo, 283 N.Y. S. 453, 157 Misc. 289.

Part of building on another's land

Where part of the mortgagor's house was built on another person's

sonalty.[40]

Fences have been regarded as part of the realty for the purpose of a conveyance or mortgage.[41]

Water pipes, cisterns, and attachments have usually been held to be part of the realty for the purpose of a conveyance or mortgage.[42]

Steam heating apparatus in a building has been held to be part of the realty for the purpose of a conveyance or mortgage.[43]

Hot water heating apparatus for heating a building by hot water has been regarded as realty for the purpose of a conveyance or mortgage.[44]

Furnaces and stoves. Furnaces have usually been regarded as part of the realty,[45] but occasionally they have been regarded as personalty, particularly when portable in character.[46] Stoves have usually been regarded as personalty.[47] As regards both furnaces and stoves the intention with which the annexation was apparently made has been regarded as controlling in this connection.[48]

Cooking stoves and ranges,[49] including gas ranges,[50] have occasionally been regarded as part of the realty, although it has also been held that gas ranges are not a part of the realty.[51]

Gas and electric appliances. Gas pipes,[52] gas logs,[53] and gas generators[54] have been regarded as part of the realty, and the same view has been taken as to dynamos for generating electricity,[55] and as to switchboards[56] and electric wiring.[57] Gas and electric lighting fixtures, such as chandeliers, brackets, and burners, have more usually been regarded as personalty and so not included in a conveyance or mortgage of the land,[58] but there are decisions to the contrary, occasionally, but not always, based on the permanent character of the an-land, such part became attached to such person's land, and was not included in the mortgage.—Collins v. Michigan Commercial Underwriters, 6 Tenn.App. 528.

40. Cal.—Pennybecker v. McDougal, 48 Cal. 160.

Lumber camp which was moved onto a wood lot in three sections on skids, such three sections never being united, and no foundation ever being placed, they resting on spruce poles placed under them, at the time they were moved did not become a fixture, but remained the personal property of the owner.—Lyman v. Leighton, 112 A. 381, 80 N.H. 12.

Sand and gravel washing plant which could be dismantled and taken down in sections was not part of realty and was not covered by realty mortgage.—McDonald v. H. B. McDonald Const. Co., 175 A. 87, 117 N.J.Eq. 181.

(4) Other instances see 26 C.J. p 724 note 60 [a].

Pipe line
Where a pipe line was used to carry water from a point of diversion on one mining claim to another mining claim, it was not a "fixture" within Civ.Code § 1013, with respect to the mining claim on which the line originated where the diversion occurred.—Melrose v. Cooley, 196 P. 105, 50 Cal.App. 768.

Water heater
A water heater which was part of hot water system for building is an immovable within Civ.Code art 467, as amended by Act 1912 No. 51, notwithstanding water heaters are not expressly named therein.—Scott v. Brennan, 109 So. 822, 161 La. 1017, 48 A.L.R. 1143, modifying 5 La.App. 45—Scott v. Brennan, 3 La.App. 452.

Electric fans[60] and electrical refrigerators[61] have been held to be fixtures.

Mirrors have, according to the mode of annexation, been treated as a part of the realty[62] or as personalty.[63]

Trees and plants in a nursery have been regarded as part of the realty, so as to pass by a deed or a mortgage thereof.[64]

Store counters, shelving, show cases, racks, and the like, have been regarded as part of the realty for the purpose of a conveyance or mortgage.[65]

§ 46. —— Language of Particular Instrument

The language of the particular conveyance or mortgage may determine whether an article or structure on land passes to the grantee or mortgagee or is reserved to the grantor or mortgagor.

The question whether an article or structure on land is within the operation of a conveyance or mortgage being primarily one of the intention of the parties to the instrument, see supra § 44, that is, of the construction of the language thereof, the specific terms of description may determine whether the particular articles are embraced therein, irrespective of the character of such articles as part of the realty or as personalty.[66]

Conveyance of factory by name. A conveyance or mortgage of a mill or manufacturing establishment by a general name, or terms of description commonly understood to embrace all its essential parts, passes the machinery belonging thereto, whether annexed to the freehold or not.[67]

Conveyance of "fixtures." The term "fixtures," when used in a conveyance, is construed, it seems, as meaning articles annexed to the realty,[68] unless it appears to have been intended by the parties to have some other meaning.[69]

Exception or reservation in instrument. An express exception or reservation in the instrument of an article which would otherwise, by reason of its annexation to the realty, pass as part thereof, is effective to exclude it from the operation of the instrument.[70]

Steam heating system as "equipment" reserved
Where the sale contract reserved to the vendor the right to remove "the balance of the machinery, belting, shafting, and equipment in said mill," the steam heating system was not part of the "equipment" which the vendor was authorized to remove. —Kent Storage Co. v. Grand Rapids Lumber Co., 214 N.W. 111, 239 Mich. 161.

Removal by purchaser of fixtures
Vendee, receiving deed while a purchaser of fixtures was in possession, removing them took with notice of such purchaser's rights and subject thereto, especially where vendor reserved right to remove fixtures, and vendee had extended time for removal, and permitted the work to continue after expiration of the extension.—Western Maryland Dairy v. Maryland Wrecking & Equipment Co., 126 A. 135, 146 Md. 318.

Quitclaim deed
Whether sprinkler system, installed on property conveyed by quitclaim deed of realty only, was personal property or became real property by being affixed to realty, was immaterial in action against grantor, for conversion thereof, where plaintiff retained all rights which he had

§ 47. —— Extraneous Agreement or Exception

Articles annexed to the land may be reserved by a grantor or mortgagor by an agreement with the grantee or mortgagee extraneous to the conveyance or mortgage.

An extraneous agreement that certain articles, although annexed, shall not pass thereby has been given effect regardless of the fact that the agreement is in no way referred to in the mortgage instrument or conveyance.[71] Even an oral exception or reservation of fixtures on the premises has been held effective to withdraw them from the operation of the instrument,[72] although there are cases to the effect that an oral exception or reservation of fixtures is a nullity.[73]

§ 48. —— Contemporaneous Chattel Mortgage or Bill of Sale

The execution of a chattel mortgage on articles annexed to the realty concurrently with the making of the real estate mortgage is some evidence that the parties intended that the articles included in the chattel mortgage should not be embraced within the mortgage on the land.

That a chattel mortgage was also given on the article annexed does not show, conclusively at least, that the article is not to be regarded as part of the realty for the purpose of a mortgage on the latter, it being recognized that this may be merely a measure of precaution,[74] although this circumstance has been referred to as evidence that the article included in the chattel mortgage was not intended to be covered by the mortgage on the realty.[75]

That a separate bill of sale of articles annexed was executed at the time of a conveyance of the realty has occasionally been regarded as not affecting the vendor's right to claim such articles as covered by a purchase-money mortgage on the realty,[76] although in other decisions a contrary view has apparently been asserted.[77]

Effect of failure to remove property
(1) Where personal property belonging to one person is attached to the land of another under circumstances preserving its character as personal property, the fact that a subsequent deed of the land contains a license to remove the personalty

The forfeiture of fixtures annexed by the grantee on the breach of a condition named, and the right of the grantor to a lien on fixtures for the unpaid purchase price are discussed infra §§ 50, 51.

b. Annexation by Purchaser under Land Contract

In the absence of an agreement, articles annexed or structures erected by a purchaser of land in possession under a contract of purchase become part of the land and may not be removed by the purchaser or those claiming under him without the consent of the vendor.

In the absence of an agreement, articles annexed or structures erected by a purchaser of land who is in possession by virtue of his contract of purchase, but who has not yet obtained title to the premises, become part of the land, his intention to that effect being presumed, from his interest under his contract and expectation of acquiring absolute title.[80] Such articles or structures ordinarily may not be removed by the purchaser without the consent of the vendor.[81] In the event of the purchaser's default, the articles or structures thus annexed or erected belong to the vendor.[82] The purchaser in such case stands in a position analogous to that of a mortgagor, and has no greater rights of removal than the mortgagor has as against the mortgagee.[83]

In determining whether chattels placed on the land by the purchaser have become part of the realty, the law favors annexation to the land as in the case of mortgagor and mortgagee and grantor and grantee.[84] The court cannot be governed by the consideration that the vendor has been well compensated while creditors of the insolvent purchaser will suffer great loss.[85] However, machinery annexed merely to test the property for mining purposes by one who had an option on the property,[86] or who had actually contracted to purchase it, but had only made a first payment,[87] has been regarded as retaining its character as personalty and so to be removable by him.

within a specified time without any condition of forfeiture does not change the status of the personalty to that of a fixture on failure to remove the property within the terms of the license.—Lane v. Bell Lumber Co., supra.

(2) If a right to remove a tramroad constructed on land under an agreement that it might be removed within a specified time was forfeited by failure to make such removal within the time agreed, such forfeiture was not automatic, but the right to the forfeiture must have been claimed and asserted by the person entitled thereto.—Lane v. Bell Lumber Co., supra.

Replacements

Land contract, providing that all substitutions and replacements of machinery on property should be made only with written consent of seller to protect seller in security for balance due, did not prohibit unauthorized betterment replacements, but constituted such replacements part of security.—Wilson v. Failure to exercise option

Under contract giving right to possession of mining claims, right to make improvements and right to buy claim, where possession was taken and improvements were made but right to buy claims was never exercised, mining machinery placed on premises by person having such right did not become part of realty but was subject to attachment by his creditor.—Dierks v. Default by vendor. If the contract fails of actual consummation through the default of the vendor, the general rule does not apply, and a right of removal exists in favor of the purchaser.[88]

An agreement between the vendor and purchaser according the right of removal will operate in favor of the purchaser,[89] and the right of removal exists, it has been said, when the contract of purchase provides that the purchaser may abandon it if, on testing the value of the property, the result is not satisfactory.[90]

Claimant under purchaser. One who claims, under the purchaser, the articles annexed has no greater rights than the purchaser himself,[91] and this is true as to one to whom, for instance, he has transferred the articles annexed,[92] or mortgaged them,[93] or as to an attaching creditor of the purchaser.[94] However, as shown supra § 20, an agreement for removal entered into by the purchaser with a third person, as in the case of a conditional sale of an article to be annexed, has been regarded as effective in favor of such person.

c. Annexation after Mortgage

In the absence of an agreement or a statute otherwise providing, fixtures annexed by a mortgagor of land after the execution of the mortgage are subject thereto.

In the absence of an agreement or statute otherwise providing, fixtures annexed by a mortgagor of land after making the mortgage are subject thereto.[95] The right of the mortgagee to such fixtures is superior to the right of the mortgagor and those claiming under him.[96] While the mortgage remains

No specific rule can be laid down designating when articles not permanently attached to realty become subject to a mortgage thereon.—O'Dell v. Day, 183 N.W. 17, 214 Mich. 566.

Foreclosure of mortgages covering realty on which portable garages were erected did not change nature of garages as personalty.—Medford Trust Co. v. Priggen Steel Garage Co., 174 N.E. 126, 273 Mass. 349.

Landowner's acceptance of advances from mortgagee for garages was not controlling on question whether portable garages remained personalty.—Medford Trust Co. v. Priggen Steel Garage Co., 174 N.E. 126, 273 Mass. 349.

Elements considered

(1) Question whether personalty brought onto mortgaged premises becomes part of realty depends on whether real intention is to incorporate the equipment with the mortgaged property so as to make of it real estate, the old test of physical attachment and capability of removal without injury to freehold no longer being the sole test.—In re American Pile Fabrics Co., D.C.Pa., 12 F.Supp. 86, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 85 F.2d 961, certiorari denied Bateman v. Ideal Building & Loan Ass'n, 57 S.Ct. 320, 299 U.S. 615, 81 L.Ed. 454.

(2) Whether equipment installed in manufacturing plant has been incorporated in realty so as to become subject to lien of mortgage thereon is primarily a question of intention, and where there is no express provision in mortgage on the subject, such intention is to be determined from mortgage and surrounding circumstances.—Jankey v. Ellis Silk Hosiery Co., D.C.Pa., 16 F.Supp. 927.

(3) The intention of the parties that articles annexed after the making of the mortgage should remain chattels might be shown, although such evidence as to the existing fixtures would be inadmissible as varying the instrument.—Heitkamp v. La Motte Granite Co., 59 Mo.App. 244.

(4) Intention of mortgagor that articles annexed by him should remain personalty keeps them free from the lien.—Ferris v. Quimby, 2 N.W. 9, 41 Mich. 202.

(5) Secret intention does not control.

Mass.—Ferdinand v. Earle, 134 N.E. 603, 241 Mass. 92.

Mich.—First Mortg. Bond Co. v. London, 244 N.W. 203, 259 Mich. 688.

(6) In determining whether church pews constitute personal property as between mortgagee and judgment creditor, character and purpose of annexation and intent of parties are controlling.—Diamond v. Art Contracting Co., 262 N.Y.S. 471, 147 Misc. 88.

(7) However, it has been stated that as between mortgagor and mortgagee, intent of party making annexation of chattel to realty can be inquired into, only if annexation was made after execution of mortgage.—Planters' Bank v. Lummus Cotton Gin Co., 128 S.E. 876, 132 S.C. 16, 41 A.L.R. 592.

Chattels held subject to mortgage

(1) Awning.—Sequist v. Fabiano, 265 N.W. 488, 274 Mich. 643.

(2) Carpets made especially for rooms of hotel, and glued and nailed to floor.—In re Danville Hotel Co., D.C.Ill., 33 F.2d 162, affirmed in part and reversed in part on other grounds, C.C.A., 38 F.2d 10.

(3) Complete gas, water, and waste vent systems installed in apartment building.—Hannin v. Fisher, 43 P.2d 815, 5 Cal.App.2d 673.

(6) Pews and benches.—Diamond v. Art Contracting Co., 262 N.Y.S. 471, 147 Misc. 88.

(7) Rollaway beds installed in apartment buildings.—Gray v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 77 P.2d 563, 182 Okl. 342.

(8) Tapestry on walls of hotel, tables, beds, settees, chairs, lamps, draperies, curtains, and shades.—In re Danville Hotel Co., D.C.Ill., 33 F. 2d 162, affirmed in part and reversed in part on other grounds, C.C.A., 38 F.2d 10.

Buildings and other structures

(1) Whether building placed on land without mortgagee's knowledge or consent shall be deemed part of mortgaged land, or as removable before foreclosure, depends on whether building as placed is of such character that it may be inferred that it was placed on mortgaged land with intention of having it permanently remain thereon.—Burbridge v. Therrell, 148 So. 204, 110 Fla. 6, followed in 154 So. 926, 114 Fla. 772.

(2) Permanent building held subject to mortgage.—Stutsman v. State, 275 N.W. 387, 67 N.D. 618.

Wis.—Leisle v. Welfare Building & Loan Ass'n, 287 N.W. 739, 232 Wis. 440.

(2) Gas stoves in apartment building held not subject to mortgage.—Anderson v. Southern Realty Co., 4 S.W.2d 27, 176 Ark. 752.

Machinery, appliances, and equipment.

(1) Generally, any machinery that is necessary to the operation of a mill or factory is subject to a prior real estate mortgage on the premises, executed by the owner.—Danville Holding Corporation v. Clement, 16 S. E.2d 345, 178 Va. 223.

(2) In determining whether machinery placed in an industrial establishment covered by mortgage is subject to the lien of the mortgage, question is whether machinery forms an integral part of the complete going concern, and not whether any of the machinery can be removed from the mortgaged premises without physical injury to the realty.—McClure v. Atlantic Rock Co., 14 A.2d 124, 339 Pa. 296.

(3) Whether machinery, because of its character, use, and manner, or its attachment to the premises, becomes a part of the realty, and therefore subject to the lien of a mortgage thereon, is largely a matter of intention.—Goldthorp v. Keenan, 181 N.W. 777, 192 Iowa 22.

(4) Where it is contemplated when mortgage is given that mortgage should cover operating plant, machinery and appliances subsequently placed in the plant and necessary to functioning of complete plant are "fixtures" and bound by the lien of the mortgage.—McClure v. Atlantic Rock Co., supra—Pennsylvania Chocolate Co., for Use of Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh v. Hershey Bros., 175 A. 694, 316 Pa. 292, 99 A.L.R. 139—Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh v. Harkins, 167 A. 278, 312 Pa. 402.

(5) Where lien on completed manufacturing plant was contemplated, that building was erected to be suitable for number of manufacturing or other purposes did not take machinery of plant out of lien of mortgage. —Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh v. Harkins, supra.

(6) Machinery, appliances, and equipment held subject to mortgage.

(15) Machinery installed by subsequent owner of land held not subject to mortgage.—McConnell v. Chelton Trust Co., C.C.A.Pa., 282 F. 105.

(16) Tools, cogwheels, and other articles of personalty that were in mill building when it was sold under mortgage foreclosure, if unconnected with, and unattached to, fixtures or freehold, were personalty and did not become purchaser's property.—Brown v. North Carolina Joint Stock Land Bank of Durham, 197 S.E. 140, 213 N.C. 594.

(17) Pumps in oil refinery held not subject to mortgage.—Mogul Producing & Refining Co. v. Southern Engine & Pump Co., Tex.Civ.App., 244 S.W. 212.

Refrigerators and refrigerating systems

(1) Refrigerating system held subject to mortgage.—Dolan v. Doher-to the mortgage, such as the purpose for which the loan was ostensibly secured,[1] the mortgagee's right to any appreciation in the value of the security,[2] and a provision in the instrument extending it to after-acquired property.[3]

Removal by mortgagee after redemption. A mortgagee has been allowed, after a decree of redemption, to remove a structure placed by him on the land, in so far as this did not involve material injury to the freehold.[4]

Trade fixtures. That the articles were annexed by the mortgagor for purposes of trade gives him no right to remove them.[5] Even though the realty mortgage was made by one who was or became a member of a firm which was occupying the mortgaged premises, chattels annexed by the firm have been regarded as subject to the mortgage,[6] although there are cases indicating a contrary view.[7]

§ 50. —— Forfeiture of Rights under Sale or Conveyance

Articles or structures annexed by the grantee to the land conveyed may be forfeited to the grantor on the happening of a condition specified in the conveyance.

A grantee, holding under a conveyance containing a forfeiture clause, loses his right to articles annexed, or structures erected, by him in case of the enforcement of a forfeiture for breach of the condition named.[8] Further, as shown supra § 49 b, a purchaser under a land contract loses his right to

(6) Combination gas refrigerators and ranges installed in apartment house held not subject to mortgage.—Nicklas v. Pickford, 289 N.Y.S. 174, 160 Misc. 254.

Transmission lines
Where an operating company, which has leased from a consolidated interurban railroad company all its lines encumbered with mortgages covering after-acquired property, builds new transmission lines, partly on railroad rights of way, and partly on separate property, such separate property becomes an appurtenant to the contiguous railroad property, and all such transmission lines become fixtures and subject to the mortgages.—Citizens' Savings & Trust Co. v. Cincinnati & D. Traction Co., 140 N.E. 380, 106 Ohio St. 577.

In Kentucky
(1) Chattels attached to the realty by the mortgagor after the execution of the mortgage, and not mentioned therein, are not subject to the lien unless so attached that a removal will impair it, this view being based on the fact that in that state the mortgagor retains the legal title and has power and control over the property.—Clore v. Lambert, 78 Ky. 224.

(2) General rule seems to be that chattel placed on realty after execution of mortgage does not pass under mortgage lien unless it cannot be removed without injury to freehold.—Gas & Electric Shop v. Corey-Scheffel Lumber Co., 13 S.W.2d 1009, 227 Ky. 657, 62 A.L.R. 208.

(3) In view of other and later decisions, however, the element of annexation does not seem to be the absolute controlling element.—First State Bank of Eubank v. Crab Orchard Banking Co., 75 S.W.2d 517, 255 Ky. 800.

School building
(1) Where land was conveyed for the purpose of a public school on the condition that the land would revert to the grantor when it ceased to be used for a public school, on the happening of the condition the building erected by the grantee reverted to the grantor.—New Hebron Consol. School Dist. v. Sutton, 118 So. 303, 151 Miss. 475.

(2) However, in view of various statutory provisions as to powers of school trustees, it has been held that a building erected for public school did not vest in grantor of land on forfeiture of land by reason of discontinuance of school.—Allen v. Franks, Tex.Civ.App., 166 S.W. 384.

articles annexed by him owing to his failure to perform his contract.

§ 51. —— Vendor's Lien on Fixtures

Articles which pass with the land on a conveyance thereof, or which are annexed by the grantee as parts of the land after conveyance, are subject to the grantor's lien for the unpaid purchase price.

Articles which pass on the conveyance of the realty as being part thereof are subject to the grantor's lien for the price,[9] as are articles so annexed by the grantee of the land as to become part thereof.[10] In determining whether an article is a fixture for this purpose the same considerations apply as ordinarily apply between grantor and grantee and mortgagor and mortgagee.[11]

§ 52. Between Seller and Buyer of Chattels and Their Privies

Whether an article becomes a fixture as between the seller and buyer thereof is primarily a question of intention.

The general rules as to what constitutes fixtures are treated supra §§ 1–11. In determining whether an article becomes a fixture, as between the seller and buyer thereof, the intention of the parties is the real test.[12]

The effect of an agreement between the seller and the buyer of chattels, express or implied, that the chattels sold shall remain personalty, as where they are conditionally sold or the price is secured by a purchase-money chattel mortgage, including the effect as against third persons, is discussed supra §§ 13–20. Loss of a vendor's statutory privilege on movable property by incorporation into immovable property is considered in the C.J.S. title Sales § 399, also 55 C.J. p 901 note 72.

§ 53. Between Owner of Easement and Owner of Land Subject Thereto

As between the owner of an easement and the owner of the land, a chattel annexed may retain its character as personalty.

Chattels annexed to land under a mere easement granted by the owner of the land may, as between the owner of the easement and the owner of the land, retain their personal character.[13] As between a railroad having a right of way and the owner of the land subject thereto, rails and other equipment laid on the right of way, only as incident to the use of the right of way, and with no intention that they

Machinery

(1) Machinery installed on milling property after creation of vendor's lien was "fixtures" and subject to vendor's prior lien as against lien of subsequent mortgage, where it appeared that all machines were attached to freehold, were necessary for operation of mill, and were not only adaptable but actually applied to use for which purchased.—First State Bank of Eubank v. Crab Orchard Banking Co., 75 S.W.2d 517, 255 Ky. 800.

(2) Machinery substituted for other machinery on the premises at the inception of the lien becomes subject thereto.—Van Valkenburgh v. Ford, Tex.Civ.App., 207 S.W. 405.

(3) A vendor of timber land by an executory contract giving the purchasers the right to cut timber thereon did not have a lien on a portable sawmill and boiler placed on the land by bankrupt, a timber company, under a contract with the purchasers and with the knowledge and consent of the vendor, bankrupt not having assumed any of the indebtedness to the vendor, and the machinery having been placed on blocks and posts, and not permanently attached to the land.—In re Northern Hardwood Co., D.C.N.Y., 278 F. 554.

In Kentucky

(1) A chattel annexed to the freehold by the purchaser after his purchase does not become a part of the realty subject to the vendor's lien unless the purchaser so intended or it has been so incorporated into the realty as not to be removable without injuring the property.—Clore v. Lambert, 78 Ky. 224.

(2) "It is true that the law has been stated in the above form, Clore v. Lambert, 78 Ky. 224, and for a long time the question, whether a thing was a fixture or not, depended alone on whether it was in fact so annexed to the realty that it could not be removed without injury to the freehold; but . . . the ancient rule has been enlarged and liberalized with the increase of varying business interests, and the present current of authority is opposed to any arbitrary or unyielding rule upon the subject."—First State Bank of Eubank v. shall remain after the easement has terminated or been abandoned, retain their character as personalty, although affixed to the soil.[14] This rule is always subject, among other tests, to the test of intention of the parties to make the article annexed a permanent accession to the freehold, and intention in this respect is gathered as well from the circumstances and purposes of the annexation as from the expressed intention of the parties.[15]

§ 54. Rights and Remedies of Creditors and of Purchasers at Execution Sale

The rights and remedies of creditors and of purchasers at an execution sale of property which may or may not have become a part of the realty are discussed, where the question arises in connection with the levy of an execution on the property as realty, in § 55 infra, and where it has arisen in connection with a levy of an execution on articles annexed as personalty in § 56.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 55. —— Levy on Land

In general, a levy on, and sale of, realty will pass to the purchaser all fixtures thereon.

Whether or not articles have become a part of the realty so as to pass by levy of execution on the land or a sale thereunder is determined in general by the principles, discussed supra §§ 43–51, which apply as between the mortgagor and mortgagee of land or the vendor and purchaser of land and their privies.[16] The general rule is that a levy on, and sale of, realty will pass to the purchaser all fixtures and improvements thereon;[17] however, if a fixture is detached and converted into personalty by the agreement of the owners and the lien creditors, it does not pass under a levy on, and sale of, realty.[18]

Articles annexed, or buildings erected, after sale. Articles annexed by the debtor after the sale, but before the sheriff's deed, pass under the deed;[19] but it has been held that a building erected by the purchaser at an execution sale may be removed by him on redemption when not annexed to the soil.[20]

§ 56. —— Levy on Articles Annexed as Personalty

a. In general

b. Articles removable by agreement or under lease

a. In General

Where an execution debtor has the right to treat chattels annexed to realty as personalty, the execution creditor has, as a rule, a similar right.

17. Pa.—Wright v. Chestnut Hill Iron Ore Co., 45 Pa. 475.

In spite of agreement that building remain personalty as between the bailor and bailee of a garage erected on the residence property of the bailee, its erection as a building constituted it a part of the freehold as to an innocent purchaser at a sheriff's sale of the freehold under a preexisting mortgage.—Diamond v. Butler, 17 Pa.Dist. & Co. 183.

Erection on another's land

However, where a building was erected on the land of another under an agreement that the landowner should obtain an interest in the building if he would pay off a judgment which was a lien on the land, it was held that until the judgment was so paid off the building remained the personal property of the person constructing it, so as not to pass under a sale of the land on execution against its owner.—Yater v. Mullen, 24 Ind. 277.

Pa.—Harlan v. Harlan, 20 Pa. 303.

19. Colo.—Hayes v. New York Gold Min. Co., 2 Colo. 273.

20. Cal.—Tyler v. Decker, 10 Cal. 435.

Inasmuch as the right of a creditor to treat chattels annexed to the freehold as personal property depends on the right of the debtor to do so, it follows that whatever fixtures the debtor is at liberty to remove may be seized and removed by the execution creditor,[21] and the purchaser at a sale has a right to enter on the premises and remove them.[22]

Articles which are so annexed to land as to be part thereof cannot be levied on as personalty under an execution against the owner of the land.[23] The execution creditor or levying officer cannot, by severing articles from the realty, render them subject to the execution.[24]

Whether a particular article is to be regarded as part of the realty, so as not to be subject to execution as personalty, is, it seems, determined by the same criteria as in cases arising between grantor and grantee and mortgagor and mortgagee,[25] which are discussed supra §§ 43–51, 55. Although it has been said that the rule to be applied is the one governing cases arising between landlord and tenant,[26] as discussed supra §§ 33–42. Plaintiff and defendant in execution may, if no other person then has the right to object, agree that an article levied on shall be sold as personal property, and it will pass by a sale as such.[27] Where the execution creditor, after levying on articles as personalty, consents to their attachment to the realty, they become fixtures and he thereby releases his execution lien.[28]

A parol transfer of fixtures does not sever them so as to render them liable to execution as property of the transferee.[29]

Articles to be attached. Articles not yet attached to the land, but intended to be attached thereto, have in some instances been regarded as not subject to levy as personalty;[30] but there is authority for a contrary view.[31]

Articles accidentally severed, as by a flood, have been held not to be thereby converted into personal property so as to be subject to execution.[32]

b. Articles Removable by Agreement or Under Lease

Articles annexed to another's land under an agreement or lease reserving the right of removal are generally subject to levy and sale as personalty under execution against their owner.

The effect of agreements as determining whether or not an article affixed or annexed to real property has become part of the realty is considered supra §§ 12–20, and the effect of such agreement between landlord and tenant, supra § 15; and for the rule of law generally applicable in determining whether removable fixtures are realty or personalty as between landlord and tenant and their privies, see supra § 37. Since articles and structures erected on, or annexed to, another's land under an agreement reserving the right of removal are generally regarded as retaining their character as personalty, they have been held subject to levy and sale as such under execution against their owner;[33] accordingly, articles which are removable by the tenant under a lease have generally been held subject to levy and sale as chattels on execution against him.[34] On the other hand, articles held to be part of the realty as between a lessee and his attaching creditors pass on an execution sale of his interest in the realty, notwithstanding an agreement with his lessor that he might remove them on the expiration of the lease;[35] and, where a buyer of chattels under a contract stipulating that they shall be regarded as the personal property of the seller, with the right of removal until paid for, attaches the property to real estate so as to make them fixtures, the chattels have been regarded as fixtures against everyone except the seller, so that a judgment creditor of the buyer, or a purchaser at an execution sale, may not claim the property as personal property by virtue of the contract.[36]

§ 57. —— Distress

The distress of fixtures is considered in the C.J.S. title Landlord and Tenant, § 681, also 36 C.J. p 599 note 81–p 560 note 90.

§ 58. Estoppel as Regards Fixtures

One may be estopped by his conduct or declarations from claiming as realty an article annexed to land, or from claiming that an article is not part of the realty.

By reason of conduct or declarations, one may be estopped from claiming that an article annexed to the realty is part of it,[37] as where he has treated it as personalty for the purpose of sale [38] or chattel mortgage;[39] but the fact that a deed or mortgage describes or treats articles as chattels has been held not to preclude the grantee or mortgagee from claiming them as part of the realty,[40] and the fact that a mortgagee of realty has taken a chattel mortgage on chattels attached has been held not to prevent him from claiming them as realty.[41]

On the other hand, one may be precluded by estoppel from claiming that an article is not part of the realty and is, therefore, removable,[42] as where he has treated it as realty for the purpose of sale[43] or lease.[44] The lease of land by a licensee, without mention of the article in question, has been held not to estop him from claiming it as his personal property.[45]

Effect of attachment or action in replevin. The fact that one attached certain articles as personal property was held not to estop him from claiming them as fixtures and part of the real estate.[46] However, an attachment of the articles in question as personalty,[47] or a suit in replevin to recover property,[48] has been held strong evidence against the person bringing the proceeding that the articles were not realty.

§ 59. Actions Relating to Fixtures

Actions involving fixtures are controlled by general rules.

For injuries to rights in fixtures, actions at law to recover possession or damages will lie, as appears infra § 60 a; in a proper case relief may be had in equity, as appears infra § 60 b.

Laches. An action to recover the possession or value of an article as personalty is not barred by laches where demand therefor was made within a few months after defendant acquired the realty, and the action followed.[49]

§ 60. —— Nature and Form

a. Actions at law
b. Relief in equity; injunctions

a. Actions at Law

In so far as an article, including a fixture annexed by a tenant, is regarded as part of the realty, it is not the subject of trover, replevin, detinue, or any action lying only for personalty; but in so far as an article attached to land or severed therefrom is regarded as personalty, or may, at the election of the owner of the article, be considered such, such an action will lie. An article that has become part of the realty may be the subject of an action of trespass quare clausum fregit.

Since trover lies only in the case of personal property, the general rule is that the action cannot be maintained for the recovery of fixtures which have been annexed to the soil or freehold,[50] and it will not, as a rule, lie on account of fixtures which have not been severed from the soil, and hence are part of the realty.[51] Articles which are not so annexed as to become part of the realty, and hence are merely chattels, are a proper subject for this form of action.[52]

For the same reason, the action of replevin does not lie for articles so annexed to the realty as to be part thereof,[53] as, for example, a house [54] or a turbine pump constituting part of a building's cooling system;[55] but articles not part of the realty, although attached to it, may be replevied,[56] as, for example, a counter and showcase,[57] mirrors,[58] or buildings resting on blocks.[59]

Likewise, detinue will not lie for articles which have become part of the realty.[60]

An action of trespass de bonis asportatis will lie against one wrongfully removing fixtures.[61] Trespass quare clausum will lie in favor of the owner of the freehold against one wrongfully entering and severing fixtures therefrom;[62] but such an action does not lie for the removal of an article, although attached, if not a part of the realty.[63] A lessor not in possession cannot sue in trespass for the wrongful removal of fixtures placed on the premises by the lessee.[64]

Effect of severance. Where, under the rules of law discussed supra § 21, the actual or constructive severance of a fixture has again made it personalty, it is a proper subject for an action of trover;[65] under such rules, after the wrongful severance of fixtures from the land, they are, at the option of the owner, personalty, and it has been generally held that he may then bring trover for their value against the wrongdoer.[66] There is, however, authority that to constitute a conversion there must be a taking distinct from the severance.[67] It is ordinarily sufficient that plaintiff has the right of immediate possession of the articles severed;[68] but trover has been held not to lie for fixtures severed by one in possession of the land under claim of title, since this would involve a trial of the title to land.[69]

Replevin also lies to recover fixtures which have been severed.[70] After the wrongful severance of articles constituting part of the realty, the landowner may ordinarily bring replevin for such articles as chattels [71] or he may elect to sue for damages to the land.[72] He cannot, however, maintain replevin against one in actual adverse possession of the land under claim of title, because then the action would be made the means of litigating the title to realty.[73]

Detinue will lie for an article which has, by reason of severance, resumed its character of personalty.[74] The owner of land may in this form of action recover an article wrongfully severed,[75] provided, as in the case of trover or replevin, defendant is not in possession of the land and claiming adversely.[76]

Articles removable by agreement, under the rules of law discussed supra §§ 12–20, may be the subject of an action of trover even before severance;[77] the refusal of the person in possession of the land to allow the removal of such articles by their owner has been regarded as constituting a conversion,[78] although a mere failure to deliver the articles to their owner on demand has not been so regarded.[79] Where articles removable by agreement are regarded as part of the realty, trover will not lie.[80] Articles which are personalty, or removable, by agreement, although affixed to the land, may be recovered in replevin.[81]

Articles removable by tenant. In so far as trade and domestic fixtures annexed by the tenant, although removable by him, are regarded as part of the realty, as considered supra §§ 15, 33–42, they are not the subject of an action of trover;[82] but in so far as such removable fixtures are regarded as personalty, trover will lie therefor, even before their severance,[83] the action of the landlord in preventing the removal of the fixtures by the tenant being regarded as a conversion,[84] as is his appropriation of the tenant's fixtures.[85]

As is true with respect to trover, fixtures removable by a tenant under a lease, where regarded as part of the realty, cannot be recovered in replevin by the tenant or one claiming under him;[86] but, where such fixtures are regarded as personalty, they may be so recovered.[87]

As in the case of trover or replevin, if, as between landlord and tenant, fixtures are a part of the land, they are not the subject of an action of detinue.[88]

Articles annexed by wrongdoer. One who wrongfully annexes another's personal property to his own land does not thereby convert it into realty so as to prevent the owner from maintaining trover therefor;[89] and the application of the general rule that after wrongful severance of fixtures from the land the owner at his election may bring trover against a wrongdoer is not affected by the fact that the article is reattached to another freehold.[90] Under the apparent weight of authority, if an article is wrongfully annexed to another's land without the assent of the owner of the article, it retains its chattel character for the purpose of replevin by such owner;[91] on the other hand, it has been held that replevin will not lie, because the article has become part of the realty.[92]

Action by mortgagee or person in similar capacity. A mortgagee of realty having merely a lien cannot, on the ground that an article removed from the mortgaged premises is a fixture, maintain an action in replevin for the possession of the article.[93] A mortgagee having legal title to the land, however, may, it has been held, bring an action in replevin to recover a fixture removed from the land, such as a house, provided it is not attached to the soil of another freehold,[94] and he may have an action of trespass quare clausum fregit.[95] The grantee in a security deed may bring an action for the recovery as personalty of a chattel annexed to realty as an "irremovable fixture," if wrongfully severed, although attached to realty again and bought as such by an innocent purchaser.[96] The purchaser of a house with notice that it is subject to a deed of trust to secure the payment of a bond, if he removes such house from the premises, is liable in damages to the trustee in an action to recover the balance due on the bond.[97]

b. Relief in Equity; Injunctions

A fixture may be the subject of equitable relief, as by injunction.

Unless the remedy at law is adequate,[98] a fixture may be a proper subject for equitable relief, as in a proceeding to protect the interests of a bailor,[99] a lessee,[1] a mortgagee,[2] a purchaser at a foreclosure sale,[3] the vendor in a conditional sale,[4] or the owner of property which has been appropriated and not paid for.[5] A cross bill cannot be maintained in foreclosure proceedings to obtain a decree that a warm-air furnace and certain of its piping and connections were personal property and not subject to complainant's mortgage where, prior to its filing, the sheriff levied on, and had made a sale of, the property in question.[6]

N.J.—Kircher v. Schalk, 39 N.J.Law 335.

Right to house

Where the mortgagor of real property had the right to possession and the right to remove any fixture unless such removal unreasonably impaired the mortgage security, an action will not lie by the holder of a note secured by a mortgage on the realty against the purchaser of a house removed therefrom after commencement of an action to foreclose the mortgage, although the purchaser had actual knowledge of the mortgage lien, where no showing is made that he acted fraudulently.—Tomlinson v. Thompson, 27 Kan. 70.

94. Ill.—Dorr v. Dudderar, 88 Ill. 107.

Bona fide purchase

However, even if as between the mortgagor and mortgagee the latter is regarded as having the legal title to the land, where fixtures are severed from the realty by a mortgagor in possession before foreclosure and afterward sold to one who buys in good faith and for value and with merely constructive notice of the mortgage, they cannot be recovered by the mortgagee from such purchaser in an action of replevin.—McKelvey v. Creevey, 45 A. 4, 72 Conn. 464, 77 Am.S.R. 321.

A mortgagee in rightful possession can maintain an action in replevin for the possession of fixtures removed from the mortgaged premises.—Cresson v. Stout, 17 Johns., N.Y., 116, 8 Am.D. 373.

98. Replevin

Where mortgagee brought replevin to repossess house removed from mortgaged land by party who had erected house, such party could not subsequently maintain chancery action to determine right of ownership and possession of house on ground that it had remained personalty, since on that theory he had adequate remedy at law in the replevin action.—Paeth v. Squire, 269 N.W. 175, 277 Mich. 283.

99. Pa.—Wetherill v. Gallagher, 60 A. 905, 211 Pa. 306, 107 Am.S.R. 575.

1. Right to remove improvements

Where a lease of land to the government provided that on the termination of the lease the government could remove buildings and improvements placed on the land by it, and the lessor prevented such removal, the government could maintain a suit in equity to have its rights adjudicated, and for assistance in its efforts to remove the property, the lessor being insolvent and the remedy at law uncertain.—Mack Copper Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Cal., 26 F.2d 664.

2. Building removed from mortgaged premises

Where, after the execution of a mortgage on a lot and the buildings thereon, the buildings are removed to another lot without the mortgagee's consent, the mortgagee, or a bona fide assignee of the mortgage, does not lose his lien thereon as against one claiming under a sale and conveyance by quitclaim deed from the mortgagor, although such purchaser may have had no knowledge that the buildings were so removed; and, in an action to foreclose the mortgage on the lot and the buildings so removed, where the purchaser is made a defendant by reason of his claim to the buildings as a purchaser from the mortgagor, the right of complainant to a lien on the buildings may be determined.—Partridge v. Hemenway, 50 N.W. 1084, 89 Mich. 454, 28 Am.S.R. 322.

3. Removal of "fixtures"

Where, pending foreclosure sale pursuant to the final decree, one buys and removes "fixtures" from a building covered by the mortgage, the chancellor might properly, at the instance of the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, issue an order requiring the buyer either to return the "fixtures" to the general master or show cause why they should not be returned.—Greenwald v. Graham, 130 So. 608, 100 Fla. 818.

Where a lessee installs a fixture to which the vendor retains title until payment in full under a contract expressly so providing and providing that the fixture should remain personalty, the vendor cannot have a lien against the land for the balance due on the bankruptcy of the lessee.—Nu-Way Boiler & Engineering Co. v. Morensky, 268 Ill.App. 211.

6. N.J.—Workingmen's Building & Loan Ass'n v. Del Vecchio, 151 A. 282, 8 N.J.Misc. 563.

Injunctions. In the absence of an adequate remedy at law, and in a proper case, as where the right to, or the nature of, the article is in dispute, an injunction may issue to stay the removal of a fixture,[7] at the suit of the landlord,[8] the owner of rights in the premises,[9] a contract vendor,[10] a purchaser under contract of purchase from the lessor,[11] a mortgagee,[12] a purchaser at a foreclosure sale,[13] or a judgment creditor.[14] An injunction may also issue to protect the rights of one who claims as personalty articles attached to the land.[15]

§ 61. —— Parties

In so far as a right of intervention is recognized in the local practice, parties interested may intervene in pending litigation as to fixtures.

In particular circumstances, a mortgagee has been held not to be a necessary party defendant to an action involving a fixture;[16] but a complaint against the owner of realty to recover a fixture to which the vendor retained title has been held demurrable for defect of parties defendant where the vendee was not made a party.[17]

Intervention. Parties interested in pending litigation as to fixtures may intervene in so far as a right of intervention in favor of interested parties may be recognized in the local practice.[18]

§ 62. —— Pleading

General rules of pleading have been applied in actions involving fixtures. Authorities differ as to whether, in replevin of an article which may be a fixture, the complaint must aver facts showing it to be personalty.

In replevin of an article which may be a fixture, the complaint has been required to allege such facts as will show it to be personalty;[19] but the contrary has also been held.[20] Since a building on land

That is the principle that should control, rather than the doctrine that he should not be brought in if the court can determine the controversy without prejudice to the rights of others or saving their rights. The defendant should not be put to the double hazard of a recovery in this action and also in a subsequent action by the vendee. The vendee should be made a party, so as to be bound by the judgment."—Otis Elevator Co. v. Rochester Friendly Home, supra.

is prima facie a part of the land, one seeking to recover a building in replevin must aver it to be personalty.[21] In actions of replevin, averment of performance, or waiver of performance by the landowner, of a condition precedent to the removal of a building has been required,[22] and particular averments as to demand for possession have been held sufficient.[23] In an action for the possession of personal property, a mortgagee whose mortgage is not due but who is in lawful possession, need not allege that his security is not ample or will become insufficient.[24] Under a statute designed to afford protection against conditional contracts, if the vendor seeks to recover the property covered by such a contract when annexed to realty, he must allege that he has filed his contract as required by the statute or that the landowner knew its terms.[25]

One suing for the conversion of an article affixed to the realty must allege that the article was removable and not part of the realty;[26] but in an action to recover possession of real estate and for damage to certain buildings thereon, a specific allegation that plaintiff owned the buildings is not essential, where he alleges that he owned the land from which they were severed.[27] In an action for damages involving an article that may be a fixture, a particular complaint has been held sufficient.[28]

In an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage, where the jurisdiction of the court was questioned on the ground that the petition showed the property to be attached to the realty, an allegation as to the giving of a parol chattel mortgage and the subsequent giving of a written one was sufficient to show an intention on the defendant's part that the property in question should not become part of the realty.[29]

Under a statute providing for a vendor's lien on fixtures in certain instances, a petition by an intervener in a receivership proceeding, claiming a vendor's lien, has been held sufficient to state a cause of action.[30]

E. F. Schlichter Co., 112 A. 282, 137 Md. 217.

§ 63. —— Evidence

a. Presumptions and burden of proof
b. Admissibility
c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

A presumption as to whether an article attached or annexed to realty has become part of it or remains personalty may arise from the character of the article and the circumstances of the attachment. Except in the case of a building, the burden of proof is generally on one who asserts that an article attached to realty is part of it.

Where the annexation or attachment of an article was made by the owner of the land, the presumption is that the article became a fixture and part of the realty;[38] this presumption may be overcome by evidence that it was not the intent of such owner that it should become part of the realty.[39] On the other hand, if the annexation was by a tenant, and was of such character that the article might be removed without material injury to the freehold, the presumption is that he did not intend to make a permanent accession to the freehold, but intended to reserve to himself title to the article annexed.[40] Likewise, where structures were erected on land by a licensee, consent on the part of the landowner that the structures remain the property of the licensee will be presumed, in the absence of facts showing a different intention.[41] Under a statutory provision that, where a person affixes his property to the land of another, without an agreement permitting him to remove such property, the property affixed belongs to the owner of the land, one in possession of land as owner is presumed to be the owner of the fixtures on it;[42] and the person asserting the contrary must prove it by a preponderance of the evidence.[43]

nied conversion and plaintiff admitted in reply that mortgagee had obtained title and possession of the premises in which the alleys were located, the issue as to whether alleys were part of the realty was raised by pleadings, so that mortgagee was not required specially to plead the fact as an affirmative defense.—Lesser v. Bridgeport-City Trust Co., 198 A. 252, 124 Conn. 59, 123 A.L.R. 687.

36. Admission by answer
In action for conversion of personalty, defendant's answer, admitting that underground tanks were still installed at filling station taken over by him, but that he had at all times been ready and willing to pay reasonable value thereof or to permit plaintiff to remove them from the premises, could be considered in determining whether the tanks constituted fixtures, and defendant's lease of the tanks to another could be considered on the question of appropriation.—Colonial Oil Co. v. American Oil Co., D.C.S.C., 43 F.Supp. 718.

37. Allegation of value of house
In action for conversion of house not a part of soil, allegation that house had certain value was held to warrant admission of testimony concerning value of toilet, electric wiring, gas pipes, lavatory, and similar appliances, since they were permanently attached to the house.—Davenport v. Taylor County Tuberculosis Ass'n, Tex.Civ.App., 72 S.W.2d 407.

Plea of general issue
Under a statute providing that plea of general issue in an action of replevin shall put in issue not only the detention, but also the property of plaintiff and his right of possession, in an action of replevin to recover chairs installed for lessee pursuant to agreement reserving title as security, evidence that seller had actual notice of defendant lessor's rights under lease was admissible under general issue.—Luce v. Person in possession under contract to buy
The presumption is that articles attached to the realty by one in possession of a leasehold estate in realty under a contract to buy it have become part of the realty.—Homeseekers' Realty Co. v. Silent Automatic Sales Corporation, 163 A. 841, 163 Md. 541.

er of the land.[45]

There is some authority, chiefly in the form of dicta, to the effect that articles not attached to realty otherwise than by their own weight are prima facie personalty, that articles affixed to land in fact, although only slightly, are prima facie realty, and that the burden of proof is on the one contending that the former is realty or that the latter is personalty;[46] such a view does not, however, appear to accord with statements to the effect that even though an article is physically attached to the land it is not to be regarded as a part thereof in the absence of proof of an intention to make it a permanent accession thereto.[47] In the absence of evidence of abandonment by a tenant, where title to the articles in question has not been asserted by the owner of the servient estate, there is a presumption that the articles remain on the land with the consent of the servient owner.[48]

Where machinery is indispensable to the operation of a particular factory, there is a presumption that the intention of the owner in placing the machinery there was to affix it permanently to the building and make the machinery part of the realty.[49] Where machinery is more or less permanently attached to the buildings,[50] or where it is essential to the business as a going concern,[51] or where the buildings were constructed particularly for certain machinery and removal would injure either its intrinsic value or its physical condition or both,[52] the law presumes that the machinery was intended to remain permanently as part of the realty; and the presumption under such facts has been termed "practically irrebuttable."[53] Under a statute providing that machinery used in working or developing a mine is to be deemed affixed to it, there is a presumption that such a machine was intended to become part of the realty.[54] The presumption is that a purchaser of premises containing an electric refrigerator bargained for the realty only as including the refrigerator, in the absence of a contrary showing.[55]

The burden of proof has been held to be upon one asserting that the circumstances of the annexation are such as to make an article part of the realty;[56] so, inasmuch as machinery is generally personal property, the burden of proof is on one asserting that it has become part of the realty.[57] On

Mortgage

Prima facie, buildings affixed to land become a part thereof, and, in the absence of other showing, a mortgage of them would not require the formalities of a chattel mortgage.—Perkins v. Bundy, 247 P. 751, 42 Idaho 560.

Overcoming presumption

Where this presumption has been incorporated in a statute, it may be overcome by evidence which discloses that the building was constructed in such a manner or under such circumstances as to preclude the intent to have the building become part of the realty.—Shipler v. Potomac Copper Co., 220 P. 1097, 69 Mont. 86.

Affirmative showing of accession

To justify decision that lessee has no right to remove fixtures, accession to realty must affirmatively appear.—Shields v. Hansen, 230 N.W. 51, 201 Wis. 349.

In detinue the burden is on defendant.—Calhoun County v. Art Metal Constr. Co., 44 So. 876, 152 Ala. 607.

Purchaser

(1) In suit by purchaser of premises to prevent removal therefrom of stock dining car after expiration of lease, burden was on him to prove that car was part of realty.—Titcomb v. Carroll, 191 N.E. 410, 287 Mass. 131.

(2) But in suit by purchaser of theater at mortgage foreclosure sale to restrain removal of furnishings and equipment installed by mortgagor's lessee, defendant had burden of proving that purchaser would be unjustly enriched if such furnishings and equipment were left in theater.—McHale v. Rosenblatt, 184 A. 172, 56 R.I. 120, 168.

Extension of time for removal

Burden of proof was held to be on tenant asserting oral extension of time in replevin for annexed article.—Vanhoozer v. Gattis, 214 S.W. 44, 139 Ark. 390.

In Louisiana

Where the evidence established that factory in which improvements were installed was operated by trustee for benefit of partnership in control and not for record owner, corporation obtaining title to factory from record owner could establish title to improvements only on proof that they were so merged with realty as to be immovables by nature.—Folse v. Loreauville Sugar Factory, App., 156 So. 667, followed in Builders' Supply Co. v. Loreauville Sugar Factory, App., 156 So. 672.

57. U.S.—Houlton Sav. Bank v. American Laundry Machinery Co., D.C.Me., 9 F.Supp. 112.

Tests

In absence of proof that machinery is installed in such manner that the other hand, since a building, as a rule, is presumed to be realty, the burden of proof is on one who claims that it is personalty.[58] Under a statutory provision that, when a person affixes his property to the land of another without an agreement permitting him to remove it, the thing affixed belongs to the owner of the land, the burden is on one who seeks to remove such property to show that it was placed there with permission to remove it.[59]

In suits involving conditional sales, the burden of proof has been variously placed on one who claims the article in question to be personalty[60] or to have become realty,[61] depending on the particular facts of each case or the construction of the statutory provisions held applicable; and the burden is on a purchaser from a conditional vendee of an article affixed to the realty of such vendee to show that he is a bona fide innocent third party.[62]

A realty mortgagee claiming priority over a chattel mortgagee, with respect to articles annexed, has the burden of establishing that he acquired his lien on the land in good faith.[63]

its removal will result in material injury to it or the realty, or that the building in which it is placed was specially designed to house it, or that its installation was of a permanent nature, the machinery does not become a "fixture" and a part of the realty, but remains "personalty."—In re Whitlock Avenue in City of New York, 16 N.E.2d 281, 278 N.Y. 276, reversing 1 N.Y.S.2d 655, 253 App.Div. 719, reargument denied In re Opening and Extending Whitlock Avenue, Borough of Bronx, City of New York, 2 N.Y.S.2d 1010, 253 App.Div. 810, and reargument denied In re Whitlock Avenue in Borough of Bronx, City of New York, 17 N.E. 2d 135, 278 N.Y. 714—Holt v. Male, 29 N.Y.S.2d 111.

In Louisiana

In a suit involving a cotton press, gin stands, and other equipment, where ownership of the movable and immovable property is not in the same person, the burden of proof is on one who alleges that the movable property cannot be detached from the immovable without injury.—Buckley v. Lindsey Mercantile Co., 5 La.App. 467.

58. Mont.—Shipler v. Potomac Copper Co., 220 P. 1097, 69 Mont. 86. Ohio.—McGowan v. McGowan, 18 N. E.2d 419, 59 Ohio App. 397.

Chattel mortgagee seeking to recover dwelling house apparently part of farm has burden of proof.—O'Bryon v. Weatherly, 206 N.W. 828, 201 Iowa 190.

Fences

The burden of showing that fences are not a part of the realty rests on the party who so asserts.—Brown v. Bridges, 31 Iowa 138.

School building

A consolidated school district, in order to recover a building owned by a former public school, must allege and prove that it had been erected by patrons with the landowner's consent, either express or implied, that it should not become part of the realty.—New Hebron Consol. School Dist. v. Sutton, 118 So. 303, 151 Miss. 175.

60. Attachment by one in possession under contract to buy

The conditional seller of a chattel attached to realty by one in possession of a leasehold estate under a contract to buy the land has the burden of overcoming the presumption that the chattel became part of the realty.—Homeseekers' Realty Co. v. Silent Automatic Sales Corporation, 163 A. 841, 163 Md. 541.

As against mortgagee

(1) Where elevators and their equipment were installed in a hotel by seller, after execution of a mortgage with after-acquired property clause, the burden is on the seller, claiming right of removal as against the mortgagee, to prove, not only that the sale was conditional with title reserved until full payment, but also that the elevators were not so attached to the building as to lose their character of personalty and to have become a part of the freehold.—Wheat v. Otis Elevator Co., C.C.A.Fla., 23 F.2d 152.

(2) But, where gas ranges were of such a determinate character as movables that they remained personal property after their annexation to the real estate, independently of any agreement between the buyer and seller, in an action by conditional seller to recover ranges claimed by mortgagees thereof as buyers under foreclosure sale, mortgagees had burden to establish themselves as bona fide purchasers of ranges.—Orbon Stove Co. v. Schroeder, 271 N.Y.S. 242, 241 App.Div. 832.

As against purchaser at receiver's sale

Under a statutory provision that all conditional sales of personalty where the property is placed in the possession of the vendee shall be absolute as to all bona fide purchasers and subsequent creditors unless a memorandum of the sale is filed as directed by statute, the burden is on a plaintiff who did not record his conditional sale of fixtures to show that the creditors were not subsequent and that defendant did have notice of the sale and was, therefore, not bona fide.—Weber Showcase & Fixture Co. v. Waugh, D.C.Wash., 42 F. 2d 515.

61. Burden on mortgagee

(1) In action of replevin by conditional vendor of hardware against a builder and his mortgagee, it is defendants' burden to establish that, in view of the pertinent provisions of the Conditional Sales Act, plaintiff's reservation of title was not good against the mortgagee.—G. Goldberg & Sons v. Weisberg-Goldman Corporation, 262 N.Y.S. 99, 146 Misc. 720, affirmed 255 N.Y.S. 958, 959, 235 App.Div. 717, affirmed in part and reversed in part on other grounds 184 N.E. 147, 260 N.Y. 690, amended on other grounds 185 N.E. 727, 261 N.Y. 535.

(2) Holders of subordinated purchase-money mortgage, claiming lien prior to that of conditional vendor, on chattels severable without material injury to freehold, had burden in foreclosure suit to prove that title company making advance under first mortgage before filing of conditional sales agreement had no actual notice of reservation of title to such chattels previously furnished mortgagor.—Murphy v. Luverne Realty Corporation, 257 N.Y.S. 694, 235 App. Div. 874.

Burden on purchaser

In conditional seller's action for conversion of silo material against purchaser at foreclosure sale of farm on which silo was erected, burden was on purchaser to show that silo became a fixture or, under an applicable statute, that purchaser was subsequent purchaser or mortgagee in good faith.—Craine Silo Co. v. Alden State Bank, 218 N.Y.S. 143, 218 App.Div. 263.

63. Tex.—Texas Power & Light Co. v. Malone, Civ.App., 42 S.W.2d 845, error dismissed.

b. Admissibility

Evidence of the circumstances and purposes in attaching an article to land has been held admissible to show an intention to make the article part of the realty or to have it remain personalty. To the same end, evidence of the subsequent claims or conduct of the parties involved may be admissible.

To show an intention to make an article annexed part of the freehold,[64] or an intention to have the article remain personalty,[65] evidence of the circumstances and purposes of the annexation is admissible. Such evidence may include evidence of the expression of an intention,[66] an instrument in writing,[67] and evidence of the adaptability and necessity of the article in question[68] and of the mode of attachment.[69]

Evidence of a claim, or of the failure to assert a claim, to an article as part of the realty[70] or as personalty[71] has been held admissible. Evidence that a purchaser of land knew that a tenant had the right to remove a building is admissible, in a suit to enjoin the removal, on the question of the purchaser's good faith;[72] and, in an action to re-

Evidence not exclusive
Testimony of lessee's officials that lessee did not intend articles in question to become part of realty held admissible, but not exclusive; the intention was also inferable "from the nature of the article, the situation of the parties interested, the mode of annexation, the circumstances which require the installation and the use to be made thereof."—Inge v. First State Bank of Denton, Tex. Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 217, 218, error dismissed.

Grantor's declarations and acts after execution of deed held inadmissible in determining whether annexation to freehold was intended to make an article a permanent accession.—Anderson v. Perpetual Building & Loan Ass'n of Granite, Baltimore County, 190 A. 747, 172 Md. 94, 109 A.L.R. 1419.

67. Chattel mortgage
In determining whether stock dining car on leased premises was a part of the realty so as to prevent its removal after expiration of lease, giving of a chattel mortgage on the car by lessee was some evidence of lessee's intention that car should not become a part of the realty, although giving of such mortgage could not change the nature of the car if it had become a part of the realty.—Titcomb v. Carroll, 191 N.E. 410, 287 Mass. 131.

Conditional sale contract
(1) In determining whether stock dining car on rear of premises was real or personal property, fact that car was bought by lessee under conditional sale agreement was held some evidence that he intended that car should remain personalty, and should be considered, although lessor did not know of conditional purchase.—Titcomb v. Carroll, 191 N.E. 410, 287 Mass. 131.

(2) As between the conditional seller of a portable garage and a mortgagee of the land, the fact that the garage was bought on a conditional sale contract, even if unknown to the mortgagee, had some tendency to show that the landowner did not intend the garage to become realty.—Medford Trust Co. v. Priggen Steel Garage Co., 174 N.E. 126, 273 Mass. 349.

Lease
In action against realty owners for conversion of filling station structures, lease executed by defendants' predecessor to plaintiff's lessor and subsequent instrument authorizing plaintiff's lessor to execute sublease with right of removal of fixtures were held admissible to prove plaintiff sublessee's title to structures.—General Petroleum Corporation of California v. Schefter, 16 P.2d 645, 141 Or. 349.

Agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee
Where tenant signed a written agreement as attorney for mortgagor to install electric fixtures, plumbing, etc., and subsequently tenant installed such fixtures, this agreement has a bearing on the issue whether these articles retained their character as personalty as against purchaser at mortgage foreclosure sale.—Marcus v. Rosner, 197 N.Y.S. 503, 119 Misc. 517.

Mortgage on manufacturing plant
(1) In determining whether machinery became subject to mortgage on manufacturing plant, terms of mortgage, fact that mortgagor at time mortgage was given did not own machinery, and subsequent acts of parties are proper for consideration as showing parties' intention.—In re Highland Silk Co., D.C.Pa., 41 F.2d 404.

(2) Such a mortgage is admissible in evidence, not as a conveyance of future acquired chattels, but "as it may have a bearing upon the intent as to the permanent use of such articles in connection with the work of the factory."—Solter v. Macmillan, 128 A. 356, 358, 147 Md. 580.

Application for mortgage loan held inadmissible
In an action by a mortgagee, who acquired title to the mortgaged premises after foreclosure sale, to recover and enjoin removal of improvements, introduction in evidence of written application for a loan secured by the mortgage foreclosed, stating that the mortgagor would use part of the funds to purchase woven wire fencing, to show whether fence was intended to be a fixture, was held reversible error where "the error in admitting it in evidence might have been harmless, except for the emphasis placed on it by the court's instruction telling the jury that the representation became a condition of the mortgage which the 'law presumes' the defendant fulfilled."—Federal Land Bank of Omaha v. Sells, 280 P. 98, 100, 40 Wyo. 498.

68. Ill.—Thuma v. Granada Hotel Corporation, 269 Ill.App. 484.

69. Gasoline storage tank
In an action to establish title to a gasoline storage tank, evidence tending to show that no material damage was done to the tank or the land by its removal is admissible.—Standard Oil Co. of New York v. Dolgin, 115 A. 235, 95 Vt. 414, 17 A.L.R. 1218.

Oil burner
Testimony as to what would be necessary to remove oil burner and equipment from building is properly admitted in replevin action by conditional seller against vendor of leasehold interest.—Homeseekers' Realty Co. v. Silent Automatic Sales Corporation, 163 A. 841, 163 Md. 541.

70. U.S.—Jenkins v. Boyd, C.C.A. Cal., 6 F.2d 844.

72. Wash.—Lynn v. Waldron, 80 P. 292, 38 Wash. 82.

plevy machinery conditionally sold to a contractor, evidence of payment by defendant has been held admissible on the question of estoppel.[73] Where articles attached to the realty were removed, evidence has been held admissible to show that no actual damage was suffered.[74]

Proof of a custom is not admissible, as opposed to a general rule of law, to show that an article annexed by a purchaser of land is not a fixture.[75] Particular evidence, likewise, has been held inadmissible as irrelevant or immaterial in cases involving an article attached to the land.[76]

Article as covered by instrument. In determining whether an article annexed, or not annexed, to the land is covered by a conveyance or mortgage, evidence as to the intention of the parties to the instrument is held admissible.[77]

c. Weight and Sufficiency

With respect to various particular articles, the sufficiency of evidence to establish that they did or did not become part of the realty has been adjudicated, as has the sufficiency of evidence on such questions as the removal or abandonment of articles, and their removability without damage.

In determining whether an article annexed to realty is personalty or has become part of the realty, greater weight is given to intention and use than to mere physical attachment.[78] A contract has been held substantial evidence of intention that an article remain personalty;[79] and mere testimony by a buyer of his intention that an article become realty has been held of no weight against the chattel mortgage he has given.[80]

In particular cases, evidence has been held sufficient, or insufficient, to show a building,[81] machin-

Replacement of articles removed

Where a contractor abandoned work on a building, and a subcontractor wrongfully removed plumbing which he had attached to the house, the fact that the owner paid for replacing the articles taken, from the unpaid balance due the contractor, was immaterial in an action for damages against the subcontractor by the owner.—Munroe v. Armstrong, 60 N.E. 475, 179 Mass. 165.

75. Pa.—Christian v. Dripps, 28 Pa. 271.

76. Advances from mortgagee

As between a conditional seller of a portable garage and the mortgagee of the land, the landowner's acceptance of advances from mortgagee for erection of garage, if amounting to representation that portable garage became part of realty, was immaterial, where conditional seller did not know of advances.—Medford Trust Co. v. Priggen Steel Garage Co., 174 N.E. 126, 273 Mass. 349.

Contractor's bond

In a seller's action against a city to replevy machinery conditionally sold to a contractor for installation in the city's lighting plant, the contractor's bond to the city was properly excluded as immaterial, where it did not appear that the city had been recouped for the value of the property in controversy.—Hooven, Owens, Rentschler Co. v. City of Atlantic, 144 N.W. 635, 163 Iowa 380.

Duration of assignee's ownership

In action by an assignee of a vendor in a foreclosed conditional sales contract covering an elevator against owner of building in which elevator was installed, to establish assignee's title to elevator, while assignee's ownership of elevator was essential to establishment of his cause of action, length of time during which assignee had owned elevator, under a written instrument or otherwise, was immaterial on the issue of the statute of limitations, where action was not founded on, and did not arise out of, a written instrument.—Harrison v. Consolidated Holding Co., 93 P.2d 729, 200 Wash. 434.

Files in another suit

In replevin against lessor for chairs installed by seller for lessee buyer, under agreement reserving title as security, the court erred in admitting in evidence files in a suit by lessor against lessee to show that defendant had lien.—Luce v. Scott Realty Co., 167 N.W. 869, 201 Mich. 587.

Rescission of contract under which article was attached

In detinue for an elevator installed in defendant's storehouse by a tenant, evidence as to the rescission of a contract whereby the elevator was installed after defendant had paid the tenant therefor and after he had been ejected was held immaterial.—Alabama Machinery & Supply Co. v. Roquemore, 87 So. 435, 205 Ala. 244.

Application to use or purpose of that part of the realty with which the article is connected controls as evidence of intention; the degree of annexation is of some, but minor, importance.—Bank of America Nat. Ass'n v. La Reine Hotel Corporation, 156 A. 28, 108 N.J.Eq. 567.

That sprinkler system could be removed without damage was not controlling in determining whether system was a "fixture," although it was to be considered in determining intention of parties.—Romich v. Kempner Bros. Realty Co., 92 S.W.2d 215, 192 Ark. 454.

79. U.S.—Colonial Oil Co. v. American Oil Co., D.C.S.C., 43 F.Supp. 718.

Conditional sale

(1) A conditional sale was held to be some evidence that a mortgagor did not intend that the equipment should become a part of the realty; but the intention thus manifested was not conclusive.—Commercial Credit Corporation v. Commonwealth Mortgage & Loan Co., 177 N.E. 88, 276 Mass. 335.

(2) The intention of the buyer that refrigerating system would always remain and ultimately become a part of his building and permanently affixed thereto was subordinate to the intention evidenced by the conditional sales contract that the annexing of the system to property should not change its character from chattel to realty until the price therefor was paid.—Southwestern Public Service Co. v. Smith, Tex.Civ. App., 31 S.W.2d 472, error dismissed.

Notice of right of removal

In action for conversion of filling station structures, evidence supported finding that defendants, when acquiring title to realty, knew of plaintiff sublessee's right to remove structures under agreement.—General Petroleum Corporation of California v. Schefter, 16 P.2d 645, 141 Or. 349.

Agreement for additional security

In replevin by vendors of mine to recover machinery, tools, and equipment removed from mine by purchaser after default, evidence was held to authorize findings that certain machinery placed on the premises by purchaser was merely mortgaged, by virtue of contract provision that unattached and movable equipment should be considered additional security, rather than part of the realty.—Teater v. Good Hope Development Corporation, 93 P.2d 112, 14 Cal.2d 196, superseding, App., 86 P.2d 673.

Conditional agreement

Evidence established that agreement of purchase of trade fixtures used in developing oil and gas lease under which lessor was claiming was conditional in that it became effective only on a contingency which never transpired, and hence lessor's claim by virtue of purchase could not be upheld.—Lewis v. Clark, Tex.Civ. App., 149 S.W.2d 244, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Retention of title until purchaser satisfied

Evidence showed that a furnace installed in a house before plaintiff purchased it was installed under agreement between plaintiff's grantor and defendant, seller of the furnace, that title to the furnace would remain in seller until it demonstrated its capacity to heat the house to satisfaction of plaintiff's grantor.—Newell v. McMurray, 201 N.W. 845, 51 N.D. 901.

Seller's election

Evidence was held insufficient to establish that seller had elected to treat transaction as unconditional sale.—Crown v. Regna Const. Co., 146 A. 346, 104 N.J.Eq. 469, affirmed, Err. & App., 150 A. 918.

Time of affixing

Evidence was held insufficient, in replevin action by conditional vendor of hardware fixtures, to establish what part of fixtures was affixed before mortgagee, making advances on building loan, had notice of reservation of title.—G. Goldberg & Sons v. Weisberg-Goldman Corporation, 262 N.Y.S. 99, 146 Misc. 720, affirmed 255 N.Y.S. 958, 959, 235 App.Div. 717, affirmed in part and reversed in part on other grounds 184 N.E. 147, 260 N. 93. House

Decree that a house valued at seven thousand five hundred dollars could be separated from the realty without substantial injury was not sustained by evidence showing destruction in value of two thousand dollars by removal.—Crawford-Fayram Lumber Co. v. Mann, 211 N.W. 225, 203 Iowa 748.

Refrigerating system

Evidence held insufficient to show that compressors and cabinets could not be removed without damage to the realty.—Southwestern Public Service Co. v. Smith, Tex.Civ.App., 31 S.W.2d 472, error dismissed.

Sprinkler system

(1) Evidence was held to show that removal would substantially damage clubhouse.—Globe Automatic Sprinkler Co. v. Boester, 95 S.W.2d 825, 231 Mo.App. 203.

(2) Under act for protection of prior mortgagees against attachment of goods to realty so as not to be severable without material injury to freehold, evidence, in reclamation proceedings by conditional vendor of sprinkler system installed in mill, sustained finding that system was not removable without material injury to freehold.—Buss Mach. Works v. Watsontown Door & Sash Co., D.C. Pa., 2 F.Supp. 758.

§ 64. —— Questions of Law and Fact

Whether a particular article annexed to realty remains a chattel or becomes a fixture and part of the realty is generally a question of fact or a mixed question of law and fact; but if the facts are undisputed or susceptible of only one inference, the question is one of law.

Whether a particular article annexed to realty remains a chattel or becomes a fixture and part of the realty has been said to be a mixed question of law and fact,[98] or in part, at least, a question of fact;[99] and the question cannot be ruled on as a matter of law,[1] except when the facts are undisputed or are susceptible of but one inference.[2] Another view is that whether or not an article annexed to realty is a fixture is a question of fact to be determined by the triers of fact on the evidence in the particular case.[3] Whether an article might be re-

Time for removal
In action of trespass de bonis for removal of doors and windows from building claimed by parties as chattel property, jury were held justified in finding that two months from termination of tenancy was sufficient time for removal of tenant's fixtures, that such right then expired, and building, with doors and windows, became landowner's property, and that title passed to purchaser from such owner.—Henderson v. Robbins, 138 A. 68, 126 Me. 284.

Question is to be determined by consideration of character of annexation, use made of personalty and realty, and intention of parties.—Craine Silo Co. v. Alden State Bank, 218 N.Y.S. 143, 218 App.Div. 263.

Intention as determinative of the nature of the article annexed is ordinarily regarded as a mixed question of law and fact.—Vail v. Weaver, 19 A. 138, 132 Pa. 363, 19 Am.S.R. 598—26 C.J. p 658 note 66.

Rule applied to particular articles

Gasoline pumps used at automobile service station were held not fixtures to building as matter of law.—Service Station Equipment Co. v. Hewitt, Tex.Civ.App., 282 S.W. 286.

Portable garage
(1) Portable garage is not within class of property which is realty as matter of law because of nature of annexation to realty, or because it is manifestly furniture as distinguished from improvements.—Medford Trust Co. v. Priggen Steel Garage Co., 174 N.E. 126, 273 Mass. 349.
(2) Under the rule that a tenant can remove what he has added if it can be done without injury to the freehold unless he has made it a part of the original, the holding as a matter of law that a portable garage was a part of the realty was not warranted.—Hanson v. Ryan, 201 N.W. 749, 185 Wis. 566, 36 A.L.R. 1516.

26 C.J. p 653 note 24, p 654 note 25.

Question is to be determined not only by manner in which the article is affixed to the realty, but also by moved without material injury to the freehold has been held a question of fact,[4] as has the question as to whether there was notice of a conditional sale.[5] What is a reasonable time for a tenant to exercise his right of removal has been held a mixed question of law and fact,[6] or a question of fact.[7] the relationship between the parties to the controversy.—Bell v. Bank of Perris, 125 P.2d 829, 52 Cal.App.2d 66.

Annexation, purpose, intention, and agreement

(1) Whether the article in question constitutes realty or personalty is a question of fact depending on the intention with which it was placed on the realty.—Hannah v. Frawley, 188 N.E. 385, 285 Mass. 28.

(2) Intention with which article was annexed involves a question of fact for the jury.

26 C.J. p 658 note 67.

(3) Whether there was actual annexation, application to the purpose with which that part of realty was connected, and whether the then owner intended to make permanent annexation to freehold of timber, monorail, and trolley, were questions for jury.—Nearhoff v. Rucker, 287 P. 658, 156 Wash. 621.

(4) Damage to the freehold, as showing the mode of attachment, is a question of fact for the jury.—Standard Oil Co. of New York v. Dolgin, 115 A. 235, 95 Vt. 414, 17 A.L.R. 1218.

(5) Whether mortgage covering realty included machinery on realty was a question for jury, on conflicting evidence as to intention and agreement.—Sawyer v. Foremost Dairy Products, 169 S.E. 115, 176 Ga. 854.

Where it is doubtful whether article connected with, or attached to, realty becomes part of realty not removable therefrom, the question is for the jury.—Harn v. State, 179 S.E. 553, 51 Ga.App. 34.

Trade fixtures

(1) Whether or not articles or improvements are trade fixtures is largely a question of fact for the jury.—Borchers Bros. Co. v. Ciaparro, 295 P. 1035, 211 Cal. 507—26 C.J. p 702 note 95 [a].

(2) Whether sloping false floor installed by tenant was movable trade fixture, or could be removed with little or no injury to building, was a question for jury.—Holy Ghost Catholic Church of Two Harbors v. Clinton, 211 N.W. 13, 169 Minn. 253.

Where the tenant's right to remove fixtures is governed by the express provisions of his lease, the question of such right is one of law.[8] Particular questions of waiver and estoppel have been held questions of fact.[9]

§ 65. —— Instructions

In actions involving articles affixed to realty, the propriety of particular instructions is controlled by the circumstances of the particular case.

In actions involving articles affixed to realty, particular instructions to the jury have been held proper [10] or erroneous, or properly refused.[11]

§ 66. —— Verdict, Findings, and Judgment

In actions involving fixtures, general rules govern questions as to the verdicts and findings. A general finding that articles in dispute are trade fixtures includes a specific finding of every material fact within the issues raised by the pleadings and essential to the judgment pronounced.

In actions involving fixtures, particular verdicts have been held proper [12] or erroneous,[13] particular findings warranted,[14] and particular rulings consistent with findings.[15] A general finding that articles in dispute are trade fixtures includes a specific finding of every material fact within the issues raised by the pleadings and essential to the judgment pronounced on the general finding;[16] but in an action for conversion a finding that plaintiff did not intend to affix the article in question permanently, without additional evidence showing such intention openly and plainly, was held insufficient to sustain a judgment for plaintiff on the ground that the

9. Delay in asserting rights

Whether conditional sellers waived, or were estopped to assert, rights by delay in asserting them, were held fact questions.—Hough v. Omansky, 160 N.E. 330, 263 Mass. 112.

Estoppel of realty mortgagee

Evidence that gin company, after taking chattel mortgage on machinery installed on realty on which bank held mortgage, secured from president of bank, who was also president of insurance company, insurance on such machinery, without protest being made that machinery was being covered by bank's mortgage, was held to raise question for jury whether bank had waived or was estopped to assert its lien.—Planters' Bank v. Lummus Cotton Gin Co., 128 S.E. 876, 132 S.C. 16, 41 A.L.R. 592.

10. Attachment of shelving

Where shelving supplied by tenant for use in rented premises was attached to 2x4's laid on the floor of a storeroom, and evidence was conflicting as to whether 2x4's were attached to the floor, the charge that, if shelving was not intended to be attached to realty, but in driving nails through shelving into base support some of the nails unintentionally protruded through unattached base into the floor, this fact would not as a matter of law make shelving part of the realty, was held not error.—Powell v. Griffith, 142 S.E. 466, 38 Ga.App. 40.

11. Deterioration of machinery

In an action by a lessee against the lessor to recover possession of the machinery and fixtures left on the premises by the lessee and damages for detention, an instruction directing the jury to return a verdict for plaintiff for the amount of his damages, plus the deterioration of the machinery, was erroneous where the petition did not aver that the machinery had deteriorated in value after plaintiff had abandoned the premises, and no evidence was offered to prove such deterioration.—Patton v. Woodrow, 248 S.W. 226, 198 Ky. 85.

Notice of lease

In replevin of sprinkler system sold under conditional sales agreement and installed in leased building, requested instruction that seller was charged with notice of recorded lease was properly refused, since right to remove system if it were personal and not real property existed regardless of provisions of lease.—Independent Ætna Sprinkler Corporation v Morris, 175 A. 102, 114 N.J. Law 23.

Test as prerequisite to passing of title

In a seller's action against a city to replevy an engine conditionally sold to a contractor to be installed in a city electric lighting plant, an instruction making test and acceptance of the engine by the city, pursuant to its agreement with the contractor, a prerequisite to the passing of title to the city was properly refused, the provision for the test being for the benefit of the city and not of plaintiff.—Hooven, Owens, Rentschler Co. v. Atlantic, 144 N.W. 635, 163 Iowa 380.

12. Verdict for unpaid purchase price

In replevin for value of fixtures sold under title-retaining contract, general verdict for seller for unpaid purchase price of property withheld by defendant without assessing value of property at time of conversion was not objectionable, since such verdict was in effect an assessment of value.—United Store Fixture Co. v. Grubiak, 284 N.W. 602, 287 Mich. 671.

13. Verdict for unpaid purchase price; credit

In replevin for value of fixtures sold under title-retaining contract, where part of fixtures were not delivered to defendant, verdict fixing measure of damages as unpaid balance of purchase price without crediting defendant with value of undelivered fixtures was error.—United Store Fixture Co. v. Grubiak, supra.

14. Building part of realty

A master's findings, based on view of school building, that it was of wood and placed on brick foundation, with base below surface of ground and cellar window on one side, and that there was small hallway, large schoolroom, and brick chimney extending from beneath floor through roof, warranted his finding that building was so attached to land as to become part thereof.—Meeker v. Oszust, 30 N.E.2d 246, 307 Mass. 366.

15. Equipment as part of realty; parties' intention

Finding that conditional seller and buyer did not intend refrigerating equipment to become part of realty was not inconsistent with ruling that, as between assignee of conditional seller and mortgagee, such equipment was part of realty.—Commercial Credit Corporation v. Commonwealth Mortgage & Loan Co., 177 N.E. 88, 276 Mass. 335.

article was a removable fixture.[17]

In trespass for the unlawful removal of fixtures, a nonsuit is proper where there is no evidence of permanent annexation.[18] In replevin for the value of articles sold under a title-retaining contract, the seller could not recover for the value of those articles which the buyer would not accept, although the seller claimed that he was holding them for the buyer.[19]

In proper circumstances, a receiver may be appointed.[20]

Indemnity. Where conditional sellers were entitled to possession of equipment placed in leased premises, the court could in its judgment require the seller to indemnify the owners of the building for damage caused by removal.[21]

§ 67. —— Damages

Damages for injuries to rights in articles that may or may not be fixtures are to be determined by the rule which is best suited, in the particular circumstances, for measuring the loss.

Generally, the measure of damages for the removal of fixtures which have become part of the freehold is that applicable to injury to real property;[22] but the primary object is to determine the amount of the loss, and whatever rule is best suited for that purpose should be adopted.[23] Damages for the removal of fixtures which became part of the realty may be properly fixed by their separate value, as distinguished from the change in the value of the realty,[24] and by considering their original cost as well as the replacement cost [25] and any depreciation;[26] but an assessment of damages based on the secondhand value of the articles removed is erroneous.[27] With respect to particular personal property, such as a building,[28] an elevator,[29] and with respect to refrigeration equipment,[30] and a

In a suit to foreclose a mortgage, where the bill prayed for a mandatory writ to compel a stranger to restore certain tanks to their former position, the court held that a decree of that nature would be wholly unenforceable, except persuasively by process of contempt, and instead appointed a receiver to restore the property to its former position, the cost to be included in the decree, and left the liability of the stranger for the damages to be enforced at law.—First Nat. Value of article, cost of restoration, and interest

Vendor, recovering building and electing to take money judgment on conditional seller's removal of furnace, constituting part of realty, is entitled to the value of the furnace, cost of restoring the property to its original condition, and interest from the date of removal.—Holland Furnace Co. v. Pope, 215 N.W. 943, 204 Iowa 737.

Replacement value of machine

For the wrongful retaking by a conditional seller, on default of buyer, of a machine which was sold to be attached to the realty, and which at time of retaking constituted part of a plant in the hands of the receiver of the buyer, the measure of damages is its replacement value as of that time, irrespective of the amount due under the contract of purchase, or of the sum for which the seller had expressed a willingness to resell to the receiver.—Beloit Iron Works v. Lockhart, 144 A. 283, 294 Pa. 376.

28. Measure of damages for destruction

Where a lease of part of a railroad right of way provided that on termination of the lease the lessee should be allowed reasonable time to remove improvements, the measure of damages for the destruction of a house without allowing the lessee a reasonable time for its removal was not the difference between the value of the lumber in the house and its value after the house was torn down, but the value of the house at the time it was destroyed, less the reasonable cost of removing it, and also less the value of the lumber and material saved.—Texas & N. O. Co. v. Clevenger, Tex.Civ.App., 223 S.W. 1036.

In action by assignee of chattel sprinkler system,[31] the damages will depend on the form of action and the particular facts.

Exemplary damages. To warrant exemplary damages in a suit for conversion, malicious intent must be sustained by some act other than the mere fact of withholding or preventing removal of the property.[32]

FLAG. The noun, in its primary sense of a national or state insignia, is defined in Flags § 1. As to the constitutionality of laws or regulations relating to flags see Constitutional Law § 206 notes 80, 81, § 488 note 70, with reference to salutes to the flag in schools; and § 668 notes 95–1, with reference to the prohibition of the use of the national flag for advertising. As to regulating the use or abuse of various flags see Flags §§ 2–5.

As a verb, the term signifies to signal with, or as with, a flag,[1] and does not necessarily imply or require the actual use of a flag.[2]

In an entirely different sense, both as a noun and as a verb, the word refers to a manner of paving or to a species of pavement, the noun being defined as a flat slab of stone used for paving.[3]

Flagging. One species of pavement, namely, a paving with flat stone,[4] a pavement of flag stones.[5]

The term has been compared with, or distinguished from, "paving"[6] and "pavement."[7]

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[8]

FLAGELLAT. An entry on old Scotch records, meaning whipped; scourged.[9]

FLAGMAN. See the C.J.S. titles Insurance § 1512, also 45 C.J. p 95 notes 49, 50, as constituting hazardous employment within mutual benefit society's by-laws; and Railroads § 728, also 52 C.J. p 202 note 90–p 208 note 98, duty of railroad to provide.

§ 2. Laws Relating to United States or State Flags

Under the Uniform Flag Law and other statutes, the desecration or mutilation of the flag of the United States or of a state is an offense. Such statutes are upheld as a proper exercise of the police power as tending to prevent breaches of the peace and as upholding the dignity of the flag.

Either congress[4] or a state legislature[5] may, under the police power,[6] prohibit or regulate the use of the national flag of the United States; and a state has the same powers with respect to the state flag or other state insignia. Numerous statutes have been enacted making it an offense to display, expose, or make use of such a flag, standard, color, or other insignia by persons or corporations under certain circumstances and conditions,[7] or to deface, defile, defy, desecrate, destroy, disfigure, mutilate,

For advertising purposes

(1) Proximity to United States flag of advertisements directly above and next to such flag, painted on sides of automobile, is violation of statute prohibiting advertising matter attached, appended, affixed, or annexed to United States flag represented on any substance.—People v. Picking, supra.

(2) Other cases see 26 C.J. p 738 note 8 [a].

trample on, or cast contempt on the same;[8] and under the police power[9] these statutes have been upheld as valid against various constitutional objections, such as the constitutional prohibition against denying or abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens, see Constitutional Law § 473, or the constitutional prohibition against deprivation of property without due process of law, see Constitutional Law § 668. Their aim is to uphold the dignity of the national flag;[10] and they are designed to prevent that which would shock the public sense, and, because of the publicity accompanying it, would be likely to result in breaches of the peace.[11] The question of whether or not a requirement of a salute and pledge of allegiance in public schools to the national flag is an infringement of the constitutional guaranty of religious liberty and freedom of conscience is discussed in Constitutional Law § 206 c (1), and, as noted in § 488 of the same title, a statute making it the duty of a commissioner of education to prepare a program providing for a salute to the flag for use in the public schools is not invalid as an abridgment of the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the United States.

Defenses. It is no defense that the act constituting the violation of such a statute was done in the performance of a contract made prior to the passage of the statute;[12] nor does the fact that the flag was a part of a trade-mark place defendant in any more favorable position.[13]

Indictment or information. Where the statute has clearly defined the offense, an indictment setting forth the offense substantially in the language of the statute is sufficient.[14]

Evidence. The general rules, considered in Criminal Law, §§ 530–926, govern as to the evidence.[15]

Offer and reception of evidence. The general rules, considered in Criminal Law, §§ 999–1057, govern as to the offer and reception of evidence.[16]

Strict construction

The provision of Uniform Flag Act that it should be construed so as to effectuate its general purpose was a mere declaration of fundamental principle applicable to all statutory construction and did not modify principle that a penal statute must be strictly construed.—State v. Peacock, Me., 25 A.2d 491.

"Deface or defile"

Statute, penalizing any person who shall publicly mutilate, trample on, or otherwise deface or defile any flag of the United States, uses the words "deface" and "defile" in their meaning of "dishonor" which imputes a lively sense of shaming or an equivalent acquiescent callousness.—State v. Schlueter, 23 A.2d 249, 127 N.J.Law 496.

Essence of offense

The very essence of the statutory offense of mutilating or casting contempt on the United States flag is publicity.—State v. Peacock, Me., 25 A.2d 491.

Intent required

Statute penalizing any person who shall publicly mutilate, trample on, or otherwise deface or defile any flag of the United States requires no greater intent than the words of the offense carry.—State v. Schlueter, 23 A.2d 249, 127 N.J.Law 496.

N.J.—State v. Schlueter, 23 A.2d 249, 127 N.J.Law 496.

Necessity to charge willfulness

Under a statute requiring no greater intent than the words of the offense carry, an indictment charging the offense in the words of the statute need not mention that the act was committed willfully, maliciously, or with evil intent.—State v. Schlueter, supra.

Sufficiency

An indictment, charging in words of statute that accused did publicly mutilate, deface, and defile the flag of the United States of America, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, was sufficient, notwithstanding that it did not allege that the act was committed willfully, or with a willful, malicious, or evil intent.—State v. Schlueter, supra.

15. Showing previous similar conduct

In a prosecution, under Gen.St. 1915 § 3706, for the public use of language casting contempt on the United States flag, evidence of previous use of other language expressing contempt is admissible.—State v. Shumaker, 175 P. 978, 103 Kan. 741.

Sufficiency

(1) Evidence that accused deliberately and with intent pulled a small American flag from the front of her motorcycle, broke the staff, tore, and crumbled the flag, and threw the flag to the ground sustained conviction for publicly mutilating, defacing, and defiling the flag of the United States of America.—State v. Schlueter, 23 A.2d 249, 127 N.J.Law 496.

(2) Evidence that defendant, after refusing to salute United States flag when at welfare commissary to procure commodities for himself and family, addressed a large number of people telling them that the flag meant nothing to him and was only a "rag," was sufficient to support conviction of wilfully and publicly exhibiting contempt for United States flag.—Johnson v. State, Ark., 163 S.W.2d 153.

(3) In prosecution for desecrating the United States flag, evidence supported finding that automobile, on which appeared at six different places defendant's name, emblem, and appeal to "Travel America," constituted one advertisement to which the flag was affixed in violation of the statute.—People v. Picking, 33 N.Y.S.2d 317, 263 App.Div. 366.

26 C.J. p 739 note 17.

Instructions. It is proper to instruct the jury as to the meaning and essential significance of the words of the indictment charging the offense.[17]

Punishment. In a prosecution under a flag desecration statute providing a misdemeanor penalty, a verdict assessing the penalty of a felony is contrary to law.[18] In Massachusetts, although the statute creating the offense does not provide a punishment therefor, it may be punished in conformity to the "common usage and practice of this commonwealth."[19]

§ 3. Laws Relating to Other Flags

Under some statutes the display of flags having certain inscriptions is prohibited.

Under statutes so providing, the use or carrying in parade of flags or emblems having certain inscriptions on them is prohibited.[20]

§ 4. —— Flags of Forbidden Colors

Under some statutes the display or carrying, in any public assembly, parade, or demonstration, of a red or black flag is prohibited. Slight variations or the fact that the flag is the banner of a society or a political party will not constitute a defense.

Under some statutes the display or carrying of any red or black flag in any public assembly, parade, or demonstration is prohibited.[21] Color alone brings a flag within the terms of the act.[22] If the flag is of the forbidden color in its essential and dominating characteristics, then the mere circumstance that it bears also an inscription or device of another color is not enough to prevent its being a red flag;[23] nor does the fact that it is the usual banner of a society affiliated with a political party constitute a defense.[24] The use of a red flag in violation of statute has, under a statutory provision so providing, been held prima facie evidence of its use as an emblem of anarchy;[25] but where the prohibition in the statute against the display of a red flag in public assembly is general and not limited by the presumption concerning anarchy, proof beyond a reasonable doubt that the red flag was used as an emblem of anarchy is not required in order to warrant conviction.[26]

§ 5. —— Enemy or Rebel Flags

A statute making it an offense to expose to public view enemy or rebel flags includes within its provisions flags similar in type to those mentioned. It does not require a specific criminal intent, apart from the act of displaying or exposing, as a necessary element of the offense.

Under a statute, such as the Philippine Flag Law, making it an offense to expose to public view any flag or banner used in an insurrection to designate or identify those in armed rebellion against the United States, a specific criminal intent, apart from the act of displaying or exposing, is not a necessary element of the offense.[27] Such statute includes not only the identical flags, banners, emblems, or devices actually used for the purposes therein mentioned, but also every flag, banner, emblem, or device of that type.[28]

§ 6. Law of the Flag

The law of the flag is a rule to the effect that a vessel is a part of the territory of the nation whose flag she flies and is governed by the law thereof.

The law of the flag has been defined as a rule to the effect that a vessel is a part of the territory of the nation whose flag she flies.[29] The term is used to designate the right under which a shipowner, who

An instruction, to the effect that words and acts are spoken or done "publicly" if they are spoken or done in presence of persons other than the one uttering words or doing the acts and with intent of exhibiting the contempt which the latter feels for the flag, was erroneous as ignoring distinction between what is "public" and what is "private."—State v. sends his vessel into a foreign port, gives notice by his flag to all who enter into contracts with the ship master that he intends the law of that flag to regulate those contracts, and that they must either submit to its operation or not contract with him or his agent at all.[30]

FLANGE. A projecting flat rim, collar, or rib used to strengthen an object, to guide it, to keep it in place, etc.;[1] specifically, the spread-out portion of the eyelet used in the manufacture of shoes.[2]

FLANKING. As a term used in towing, see the C. J.S. title Towage § 47, also 26 C.J. p 739 note 3.

FLARE. Used both as a noun and a verb.[3] As a noun, an unsteady glaring light, a blaze of fire or light, used to signal, illuminate, or attract attention, as on a ship or on an aviation field at night. As a verb, in one sense to burn with an unsteady or waving flame, to flame up brightly, or to shine out with a sudden light; and, in another sense, to open or spread outward, to project beyond the perpendicular.[4] A flare may be used for guarding trucks when they are temporarily halted on the road at night;[5] and is distinguished from a "torch" only by its size.[6]

FLASH. As a noun, a sudden burst of flame or light; a light instantaneously appearing and disappearing.[7]

As a technical term in metal rolling it has been described as an ordinary fin or overfill, comprising the thin extra portions of metal exuded sidewise from between grooved rolls.[8]

As a verb, to burst into sudden flame; specifically, to ignite and flare up with sudden and transient brilliancy, to emit a bright flame for a moment, as the flashing point of oil.[9]

Flashing. As a technical term in the oil cracking art, it is descriptive of a process of immediate vaporization accomplished by sudden decrease of pressure upon oil heated almost to the vaporization point;[10] in a particular context, may be synonymous with the phrase "to vaporize portions of the oil."[11]

As an adjective, the word occurs in several phrases.

Flash point. The temperature of heated oil at which the vapor rising from it flashes momentarily into a perceptible flame upon the application to it of fire, and then immediately goes out.[12] With reference to liquid asphalt road oils, it is said to mean solubility under heat.[13]

The term has been distinguished from "fire point" see ante p 806 note 39(23).

FLAT.

In General

A word which may be used in different senses.[17] It has no technical or legal meaning.[18]

As a Noun

The flat part or side of anything, as the extended palm and fingers of the hand. In the common use of the word, levelness or horizontalness is implied, especially a level plain, a field.[19] The term has been distinguished from "stria."[20]

——Geographical Sense. Land covered by the water at high tide, and left bare at low;[21] land situated between high water and low water;[22] a level place over which the water stands or flows;[23] shallow or shoal water.[24] The term may be employed as equivalent to, or synonymous with, "beach" see 10 C.J.S. p 217 note 97, and "shore" see Boundaries § 4 note 40. It has been compared with "beach," "shore," and "strand;"[25] and has been distinguished from "channel."[26]

"Flat" or "flats" used as a boundary see Boundaries § 4 notes 39–41.

——Structural Sense. A "flat," in its original etymological sense, was a floor in a building,[27] or a portion of such a floor.[28] Later the use of the word became restricted to a floor completely equipped for housekeeping purposes, or for separate housekeeping;[29] a floor which forms a complete residence in itself, a floor divided into rooms and fitted for the occupancy of a single family; an apartment.[30] A building containing such floors, so equipped, each of which is called a "flat," is itself termed a "flat," although properly speaking, it should be termed a "flathouse."[31] A duplex house may be a "flat," which may be used as a lodging house or rooming house.[32]

The term is synonymous with "apartment" see Apartment 3 C.J.S. p 1422 note 72.1 in Pocket

14. Phrases defined

24. Where fish may be taken
"This word itself is obviously one which may be used in different senses, but in this statute it is confined to some place or places within a river, cove, creek, or harbor where fish may be taken. It implies, therefore, that it must be a place more or less under water. It is frequently used by nautical men to distinguish it from the channel of a river or harbor, and in this sense, while it includes the idea of being under water, it is used as descriptive of a place not navigable with safety by ordinary vessels, on account of the shallowness of the water."—Stannard v. FLEDWITE. A discharge or freedom from amercements where one, having been an outlawed fugitive, came to the place of the lord of his own accord; the liberty to hold court and take up the amercements for beating and striking; also the fine set on a fugitive as the price of obtaining the king's freedom.[53]

FLEE. To run away; take flight; seek escape or safety by flight.[54] The term may be used interchangeably with "retreat" or "run."[55]

Flee, or fleeing, from justice. To leave one's home or residence or known place of abode, with intent to avoid detection or punishment for some public offense;[56] a departure by a person from his usual place of abode, or from the place where he has committed an offense, with intent to avoid detection and prosecution for such public offense.[57] Its essential characteristic is leaving one's residence or usual place of abode or resort, or concealing one's self with intent to avoid punishment.[58] The term presupposes the commission of a crime,[59] and implies or requires actual flight,[60] and a purpose to avoid detection.[61]

As used in particular statutes, the terms "fleeing from justice" and "fugitive from justice" are not synonymous.[62]

For references to specific uses see 26 C.J. p 741 note 44.

Other phrases are listed in the note.[63]

Flood wall. A levee, an embankment to prevent the overflow of rivers.[16] When constructed, it becomes an integral part of the river front.[17]

Flood water or flood waters. Defined generally as waters above the highest line of the ordinary flow of a stream,[18] waters which spread out from overflowing streams having definite channels,[19] or which flow out of, or have escaped from, a natural watercourse, of which they were once a part.[20] The term does not apply to annually occurring accretions in the amount and flow of the stream resulting from natural and regular causes, such as heavy rainfalls and melting of snow.[21]

It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "stream water" and "surface water" see the C.J.S. title Waters § 112, also 67 C.J. p 863 notes 26–29.

Riparian owner's rights in connection with such waters see the C.J.S. title Waters § 19, also 67 C.J. p 703 note 50–p 704 note 64, to construct defensive-works as protection against them, § 59, also 67 C.J. p 801 notes 11–13, to divert them.

Ordinary flood. One the occurrence of which may be reasonably anticipated from the general experience of men residing in the region where such floods happen;[22] one, the repetition of which, although at uncertain intervals, might, by the exercise of ordinary diligence in investigating the character and habits of the stream, have been anticipated.[23] Distinguished from "extraordinary flood" see 35 C.J.S. p 376 note 30 (5).

FLOOR.

As a Noun

A descriptive word, variable in meaning, which has more or less comprehensive significance according to the particular connection in which it is used.[24]

——Structural Sense. The word is variously used, as meaning the layer of boards on which people tread, and as also meaning the framework or structure of joists supporting the flooring of a room,[25] and specifically defined as the mere bottom plane of an inclosure or artificial structure; the bottom or lower part of any room, the part upon which we stand; the structure formed of beams, girders, etc., with proper covering, which divides a building horizontally into stories; the surface or the platform of a structure on which to walk or travel, as the floor of a bridge, the surface on which we walk, ride, or travel; or such surface or plane, together with the timbers, framework, and materials which enter into and form part of its construction.[26]

In a derived sense, the space between two adjacent floors of an entire building; a story;[27] a section of a building between horizontal planes.[28]

In one or another of the senses above indicated, the word has been said to include the outer walls[29] and the wooden stringers or joists;[30] but not to include the attic or basement of a building.[31]

It has been held synonymous with "flooring;"[32] and distinguished from "room."[33]

As to liability for defects in floors see the C.J.S.

——Parliamentary Sense. A term used metaphorically to denote the exclusive right to address the body in session,[34] or the particular place from which one addresses the body.[35]

As a Verb

To cover or furnish with a floor: as to floor a house with pine boards; also to place upon a floor.[36]

Among automobile dealers, the term designates their general practice of obtaining the aid of finance companies to "floor" cars, that is, to finance the purchase thereof under a trust receipt, or similar title retention document, whereby a retail dealer obtains possession of automobiles for exhibition and sale on the floor of his salesroom.[37]

Flooring. As a verbal noun, the word is descriptive, varies in meaning, and has more or less comprehensive significance, according to the particular connection in which it is used. Thus it may be employed to signify a floor, floors collectively, or material from which to make a floor.[38] If used without reference to a structure in its completed form, it would ordinarily convey the idea of materials suitable for use in constructing a floor or, in a narrower sense, the boards or planks for covering the framework of a floor. When used with reference to a completed structure it may mean either the materials of which the floor is composed or the completed floor structure.[39]

As an Adjective

Floor-cloth canvas. A commercial term implying a well-known article of merchandise thus described and used for the manufacture of floor oil-cloth.[40] It has been said that commercially the term is the equivalent of "oil-cloth foundations;"[41] and distinguished from "burlap" see 12 C.J.S. p 758 note 16.

Other phrases are listed in the note.[42]

FLORES DE LAS LEYES. Literally "Flowers of the law." The title given to a Spanish law book of the thirteenth century composed, it is said, by Jacobo Ruiz at the direction of King Alphonso the learned. It has been characterized as a clear and methodical compendium of the best laws relative to the order and administration of justice to judicial procedure. An evidence of its appreciation by the same monarch is the fact that most of it was incorporated, literally or substantially, into the later work, the "Siete Partidas," or Seven Grand Divisions, which has given him his greatest fame.[44]

FLORICULTURE. The cultivation of flowers or of flowering plants.[45] It is a branch of horticulture and is said to be included in agriculture in its broadest sense.[46]

I. IN GENERAL

§ 1. Definitions

Except as used in some statutes, the word "food" includes that which is drunk, as well as that which is eaten, for nourishment. As used in statutes, it may include food for animals as well as food for human beings, although in common use the word "feed" is employed when referring to articles fed to animals.

In the general sense of the term, food is "that which is eaten or drunk for nourishment."[1] It includes lard,[2] milk,[3] milk chocolate,[4] cheese,[5] coffee,[6] condiments,[7] confectionery,[8] popcorn,[9] and oleo oil;[10] but not talc,[11] tobacco,[12] whisky,[13] or saccharin.[14] What constitutes food within the meaning of statutes making it an offense to mingle poisons with food is considered in the C.J.S. title Poisons § 9, also 49 C.J. p 1058 notes 2, 3.

In food statutes the term usually includes all articles used for food or drink by man,[15] or by man

Cooking as test

The fact that an article has not been cooked is not decisive as to whether it is food.—Totten v. Pittsburgh Melting Co., Pa., 232 F. 694, 146 C.C.A. 620, affirmed 38 S.Ct. 3, 248 U.S. 1, 63 L.Ed. 97.

Food and drink distinguished

(1) Some authorities point out that there is a plain and fundamental distinction between food and drink and that in common usage and understanding they are complementary and associate, but not synonymous, terms.—Commonwealth v. (2) Also it is said that in popular usage the term "food" seems to imply solid material, such as meat, bread, etc.; that the mere fact that milk, as all other liquids, may, in the terminology of the medical profession and dictionaries, be classified as food cannot deprive the consuming public of its own definition; and that, to the man on the street, milk means a liquid and not food.—Rialto Luncheonette v. 1481 Broadway Corporation, 11 N.Y.S.2d 39, 170 Misc. 754.

and other animals,[16] whether simple, mixed, or compound.[17] In construing certain statutes, however, it has been held that the term "food" does not include a beverage or drink;[18] and it is also held that, while the usual pure food statute which expressly provides that the term "food" shall include articles used for drink would undoubtedly cover the ordinary beverage, it does not comprehend an article, such as whisky, which at the time is outlawed as a beverage.[19] While articles used for medicines and also used for food are within some food statutes,[20] concentrated mineral spring water is not a food within the meaning of the federal statute where it is not in its original condition as it came from the earth and the processes of separation of the constituent drug elements have been carried to the extent that the water can no longer be used as a beverage, but only in small quantities or doses as a drug.[21] A legislative body may provide its own definition of food, under a law which it enacts, and, when it does so, that definition must necessarily control regardless of dictionary definitions,[22] or even though it goes beyond the ordinary meaning of the term.[23]

Feed is a word with a very definite and well-understood meaning.[24] It has been defined as that which is eaten; especially, food for beasts; fodder; feeding stuff; pasture, hay; grain, ground or whole; an allowance of provender given to a horse, cow, etc.; a meal; as a feed of corn or oats.[25] In its ordinary sense it is used with reference to cattle and hogs.[26] It is employed in common use as referring to articles to be fed to animals, and especially in connection with the names of particular grains or vegetables to describe the by-products of such grains or vegetables, consisting of the residue after subtracting those parts which are useful for human food.[27]

Fodder is a word derived from the Anglo-Saxon word "foda," and is defined as meaning food; that which is fed out to domestic animals; especially coarse food for cattle, horses, and sheep, as hay, vegetables, etc.[28] Peanuts may be regarded as within the term.[29]

§ 2. Rights of Property and Contracts

A statute relating to food does not affect a contract for the sale of food, or the rights and remedies of the parties thereunder, unless it makes the contract illegal or prescribes a standard which becomes a part of the contract and the measure of performance, or modifies the contract in respect of price.

Where a sale of food is unlawful or illegal by virtue of a statute the seller cannot recover the purchase price.[30] This is true in respect of the purchase price of a diseased animal sold for food purposes, although the seller had no knowledge of the diseased condition and it was not discovered until an inspection was made by a government inspector.[31] It is also true where, at the time of the consummation of the sale by delivery, the condition of the food was such as to bring it within the statute, even though at the time of the making of the executory agreement to sell the food was in sound condition and the agreement was valid.[32] However, where one buys sound articles of food for future delivery, such articles to be put in storage and the buyer to stand the depreciation, the seller is not prevented, by reason of a statute making it an offense to have in one's possession with intent to sell any decomposed articles of food, from a recovery because such articles are decomposed when delivered.[33] Under a statute making it unlawful to sell an article imitating or resembling butter it is not a defense to an action for the recovery of the purchase price that the article sold was designed to take the place of butter, this not being unlawful.[34] A pure food statute does not change the rules of law governing express or implied warranties, as relating to the sales of food products.[35]

A contract to sell milk means a contract which fulfills the requirements of the statute, defining standard milk and making the sale of milk below such standard a misdemeanor, and a delivery of milk below the standard fails to comply with a contract to sell and deliver milk.[36] It has been held, however, that a statute prohibiting the making, selling, or exchanging of condensed milk unless manufactured from unadulterated and wholesome milk from which the cream has not been removed, will not prevent a manufacturer of condensed milk made from half skimmed and half whole milk, who sold the article as such, from recovering the price from one who bought with knowledge.[37] The failure of the vendor of milk to register his dairy, under a statute making such failure an offense, will not prevent the recovery of the price of milk which complies with the standard fixed by statute.[38] Recovery has been allowed where plaintiff did not have a required state license,[39] and denied where he did not have a required permit from a municipal department of health,[40] to sell milk.

A contract to purchase milk is not abrogated, but merely modified as to price, by a subsequent statute creating a milk control board and authorizing it to fix prices to be charged for milk;[41] and, where the purchaser continues to receive milk after the board fixes a minimum price higher than the price specified in the contract, it becomes obligated to pay for the milk at the higher price.[42] No recovery can be had for breach of a contract providing for a rebate from the price fixed by a valid order of an officer, board, or commission;[43] but an order which is void [44] and has been so adjudged [45] has no effect on the right to, or amount of, recovery in an action between parties to a contract for the sale of milk; and where a contract between the state and a milk company for delivery of milk to a state institution, although violating a statute, has been executed, an injunction to restrain state officials from making payments thereon will not be granted.[46]

Violation, or intended violation, of law on resale. An importer and seller of adulterated gelatine, who gave bond to obtain its release and to assure the federal authorities that it would be sold only for technical purposes and not for consumption as food, is entitled to recover the amount which he was compelled to pay to the federal authorities under the bond from the purchaser where the latter purchased with knowledge of the federal restrictions and with the understanding that he would comply therewith, but resold the gelatine for food purposes.[47] On the other hand, where the seller has not performed, and the contract has on its face no taint of illegality, a buyer for resale will not be denied relief unless he contemplated an illegal method of performing the contract or intended to violate the law in disposing of the property.[48]

Contract made in another state. A statute prohibiting the making or selling of an article of food has no extraterritorial force,[49] and a contract made and executed in another state for the sale of such article is enforceable in the state where such sale is forbidden,[50] the sale of such article being legal at common law,[51] and it not being unlawful under such statute to send or bring such article into such state.[52] Knowledge that defendant might, or even that he intended to, violate the food laws of a state will not vitiate a contract made and executed in another state.[53] Where food stuffs shipped from one state to another are graded according to the standard fixed by the statute of the former state, a buyer who did not specify any quality has no cause of complaint even if that standard is below the standard of the state to which the shipment is made.[54]

Evidence. A pure food statute which makes a violation thereof a criminal offense does not change the established rules of evidence,[55] or the proof required,[56] in actions for damages growing out of the sale and delivery of food products. In an action to recover the purchase price of an article of food the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that the article delivered by him was up to the standard prescribed by statute;[57] but this does not make it necessary for him to show that an analysis of the article has been made,[58] it being sufficient to show this by evidence of other relevant facts and circumstances.[59] Where in an action for the price of food stuffs, and for work performed by plaintiff in buying such food stuffs, defendant claims a deduction on the ground that the food stuffs are misbranded in violation of the statute, he has the burden of proving misbranding.[60]

II. STATUTORY AND MUNICIPAL REGULATIONS

§ 3. In General

Many regulations of the production, manufacture, sale, marketing, and transportation of food have been enacted or adopted for the protection of the public health, and frequently also for the purpose of protecting the public from fraud, and sometimes for the further purpose of preventing economic disturbance and unfair practices in a particular food industry.

The selling of unwholesome provisions was, as noted infra § 39, an offense at common law; but the common law being inadequate to the complete protection of the public against abuses in connection with the production and sale of food,[61] or at least having become so with the growth in complexity of social and economic structures,[62] many regulations of the production, manufacture, sale, marketing, and transportation of food have been enacted or adopted by regulatory bodies and considered by the courts. Some of these regulations have been made by congress,[63] many others by state or municipal legislative bodies,[64] and some, especially in recent years, by boards or other agencies vested with regulatory powers. One of the purposes,[65] indeed, the primary purpose,[66] of such regulations is the protection of the public health. Another purpose of many regulations of this nature is the protection of the public from fraud.[67] The purpose of the federal statute relating to food generally is well established;[68] and it has been conclusively presumed that a state had a like purpose in adopting an act applicable to intrastate commerce.[69] While the purpose of a state milk control law is to procure, maintain, and safeguard an adequate supply of milk for public consumption,[70] it may have another purpose, namely, that of eliminating economic disturbances and unfair practices or methods of competition in the milk industry.[71] The various regulations are not designed primarily for the protection [72] or punishment [73] of dealers, but rather for the protection of producers [74] or consumers [75] or both.[76]

Ind.—Milk Control Board of Indiana v. Phend, 9 N.E.2d 121, 104 Ind. App. 196.

Main purpose of the milk control law is to insure a sufficient supply of wholesome milk, which cannot be accomplished unless the high cost of maintaining sanitary conditions of production and standards of purity is returned to the producers of milk.—Rieck-McJunkin Dairy Co. v. Milk Control Commission, 18 A.2d 868, 341 Pa. 153.

At lowest cost
(1) It is said that milk control law provision permitting determination of minimum wholesale prices by director of agriculture was written in the public interest to supply good, pure, wholesome milk to the consumer at the lowest cost the traffic will permit.—Challenge Cream & Butter Ass'n v. Parker, Cal.App., 125 P.2d 864.

(2) Previously, however, it was said in the same jurisdiction that the Milk Control Act is not primarily aimed at what the dealer or consumer shall pay, but what the producer shall receive.—United Milk Producers of California v. Cecil, 118 P.2d 830, 47 Cal.App.2d 758.

Cutthroat competition
The Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 and milk marketing order issued thereunder were intended to achieve fair division of more profitable fluid milk market among all producers, thereby eliminating disorganizing effects of cutthroat competition among producers striving for fluid milk market.—Elm Spring Farm v. U. S., C.C.A.Mass., 127 F.2d 920, modifying, D.C., U. S. v. Elm Spring Farm, 38 F.Supp. 508.

Real purpose of milk control act was to regulate the marketing and price of milk, not to provide for sanitary regulations relative to its production or distribution.—Milk Control Board v. Pursifull, Ind., 38 N.E.2d 246.

Industry
(1) The purpose of the statute requiring labeling of containers of canned citrus fruit and juices to show state in which fruit was grown and requiring word "Florida" to be embossed upon or stamped into tin of containers of citrus fruit or juice produced in Florida was to protect the citrus industry of the state.—Polk Co. v. Glover, D.C.Fla., 22 F.Supp. 575, reversed on other grounds 59 S.Ct. 15, 305 U.S. 5, 83 L.Ed. 6.

(2) The purpose of the act dealing with the grading of milk and cream obtained from producers for commercial use is to encourage and reward the production of the highest quality of cream and milk, thereby effecting the improvement of one of the state's principal industries.—State ex rel. Van Winkle v. Farmers Union Co-op. Creamery of Sheridan, 84 P.2d 471, 160 Or. 205.

lations for permissible purposes will be upheld where they are within the power of the particular body making them, do not violate constitutional provisions, and are not arbitrary, capricious, or unreasonable.

The business of making and selling bread may be regulated.[77] Also, the milk business, including the production and sale of milk and the manufacture and sale of milk products, is affected with a public interest and subject to regulation,[78] in the interest of the public health [79] or for the purpose of preventing deception of the public.[80] Regulations of such businesses, as well as other food regulations, must, where they are within the power of the particular body making them, and do not offend constitutional provisions, be upheld unless they are arbitrary or capricious and do not bear a reasonable relation to the preservation of the public health or the protection of the public from imposition.[81]

Puerto Rican statutes prohibiting the adulteration of milk [82] and coffee [83] are within the power of the legislature to enact, and are valid.

b. Power of Officer, Board, or Other Agency

Within the scope of the power conferred on him or it by a valid statute or municipal ordinance, and in the manner required by governing law, an officer, board, or other agency may make, enact, or issue rules, regulations, ordinances, or orders concerning food, provided they are reasonable and are not inconsistent with constitutional or statutory provisions or, in some cases, municipal ordinances. As provided by statute, an order of this character must be preceded by notice, hearing, and findings; and it is subject to judicial review.

When conferred on him or it by a valid state or federal statute, or municipal ordinance, as the case may be, a board of health, milk control board, secretary of agriculture, or other officer, board, department, commission, or agency has power to make, enact, or adopt rules, regulations, ordinances, or orders relating to foods or food products, including, among others, those pertaining to the definitions, standards, production, manufacture, handling, or marketing of such foods or food products.[84] In such case a particular order, ordinance, rule, or regulation may be valid [85] or invalid [86] accordingly

Lack of implied power

Director of Agriculture is a public official and as such, under the milk control law, has powers with reference to fixing milk prices expressly enumerated by the statute, and implied powers necessary to the exercise of the powers expressly granted; but, where his order fixing different prices for milk sold in glass containers and milk sold in fiber containers was not necessary to the exercise by him of the express powers given him in the milk control law, power to make such order was not implied.—Challenge Cream & Butter Ass'n v. Parker, Cal.App., 125 P.2d 864.

Promotion of honesty and fair dealing in interest of consumers

Under the statute authorizing the federal security administrator to promulgate regulations fixing definitions and standards of identity of food whenever in his judgment such action will promote honesty and fair dealing in the interest of consumers, administrator's action in the interest of consumers is expressly limited to the promotion of honesty and fair dealings in their behalf. The words "honesty and fair dealing" were used in the statute in their ordinary sense and did not indicate an intent to promote the consumers' health or authorize action merely to avoid confusion on the part of consumer or to educate the public as to dietary requirements.—Quaker Oats Co. v. Federal Security Administrator, C.C.A., 129 F.2d 76.

Jurisdiction as between different agencies

(1) In Kansas, the statutes dealing specifically with milk and other dairy products confer on the state board of agriculture the exclusive jurisdiction to promulgate rules and regulations in matters dealt with by such statutes. Under provisions of the Food and Drugs Act relating to foods and drugs generally, and dealing with the subjects of adulteration and misbranding, and in absence of comparable or corresponding provisions in the milk acts, the state board of health, which is charged with duty of enforcing provisions relative to adulteration and misbranding, may promulgate reasonable rules and regulations thereunder applicable to milk and other dairy products, relating only to the ingredients, the constituent elements, and the character or nature of such products in order to safeguard public health or to prevent deception, but such regulations may not otherwise relate to sale or to production, manufacture and handling of such products, or to other matters subject to exclusive regulation by state board of agriculture.—State v. Reynolds, 107 P.2d 728, 152 Kan. 762.

(2) In New York, except for the items mentioned in Agriculture and Markets Law art 4-a, the inspection and supervision of sanitary measures as to milk and milk products consumed are controlled by the department of health.—Aerated Products Co. of Buffalo v. Godfrey, 35 N.Y.S. 2d 124, 263 App.Div. 685.

consistent or inconsistent with statutory provisions[90] or regulatory provisions enacted or adopted by a superior regulatory body,[91] and is or is not made or issued by a proper and regular exercise of the power conferred.[92] A regulation made under authority granted by an unconstitutional statute is itself unconstitutional and void.[93]

From a procedural standpoint, it is ordinarily necessary and sufficient that, before the issuance of an order, the steps and proceedings required by statute be taken.[94] This is true as to compliance with statutory provisions relating to the initiation of the proceedings,[95] notice,[96] hearing,[97] and stat-

Petition not fatally defective

Petition on which commissioner of agriculture and markets based order providing for minimum milk prices and equalization was not so defective as to invalidate commissioner's order, where party seeking to review order was in no way surprised or misled by failure to make petition more specific as to facts, and there was a complete hearing on all matters essentially involved in the order.—New York State Guernsey Breeders' Co-op. v. Noyes, 21 N.Y.S.2d 347, 260 App.Div. 139, appeal granted 22 N.Y.S.2d 633, 260 App.Div. 841, modified on other grounds 32 N.E.2d 823, 285 N.Y. 523, following 30 N.E.2d 471, 284 N.Y. 197, modifying 22 N.Y. One notice and hearing

Under a particular milk control statute, notice and public hearing may be necessary before a milk control area is established by the milk commission, but not, after the establishment of such area, before the promulgation of rules and regulations.—Milk Commission v. Dade County Dairies, 200 So. 83, 145 Fla. 579.

Presumption exists that milk control board prior to fixing prices made investigation and took proofs in absence of contrary showing.—Supplee-Wills-Jones Milk Co. v. Duryee, 181 A. 908, 116 N.J.Law 75.

Due process

Where only a limited judicial review is authorized by statute, there must be such a fair hearing before the board as to satisfy the requirement of due process of law.—Johnson v. Michigan Milk Marketing Board, 295 N.W. 346, 295 Mich. 644.

Hearing before predecessor

Where authority under federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act to promulgate regulations for food was transferred from secretary of agriculture to federal security administrator during course of a hearing on a regulation, administrator could promulgate a regulation on the basis of the hearing had and evidence adduced while food and drugs administration was under supervision of the secretary of agriculture; and fact that only six days intervened between transfer of the duties to administrator and his promulgation of the regulation would not authorize declaring order invalid on ground that administrator did not read the record before issuance of his order, especially where order contained an affirmative recitation of official regularity.—Twin City Milk Producers Ass'n v. McNutt, C.C.A., 122 F.2d 564.

Consideration and record of evidence and investigation

(1) Under some milk control acts, the milk control board or commission may, in fixing minimum prices, consider not only the facts presented at a public hearing, but also those utory provisions relating to the findings,[98] statement in writing of the reasons for the order,[99] and the holding of a referendum on the approval or disapproval of the proposed order.[1] However, where an order has been expressly ratified and confirmed by a subsequently enacted statute, it is otherwise before it, such as those disclosed by its own investigation or an investigation by a legislative committee.

U.S.—Highland Farms Dairy v. Agnew, D.C.Va., 16 F.Supp. 575, affirmed 57 S.Ct. 549, 300 U.S. 608, 81 L.Ed. 835.

N.Y.—Baldwin v. Dellwood Dairy Co., 270 N.Y.S. 418, 150 Misc. 762.

(2) In determining prices, the board must ground those prices on investigation and proofs.—Supplee-Wills-Jones Milk Co. v. Duryee, 181 A. 908, 116 N.J.Law 75.

(3) The mandate for a public hearing and notice thereof imports an obligation to consider whatever testimony is given.—New York State Guernsey Breeders Co-op. v. Noyes, 30 N.E.2d 471, 284 N.Y. 197, modifying 22 N.Y.S.2d 132, 260 App.Div. 240, followed in 32 N.E.2d 823, 285 N.Y. 523, modifying 21 N.Y.S.2d 347, 260 App.Div. 139, appeal granted 22 N.Y.S.2d 633, 260 App.Div. 841.

(4) The general intent and purpose of a milk control act is that in the promulgation, revision, or change of official orders fixing prices, a definite record shall be made of all evidence produced before milk control commission, and of all matters on which it bases its order.—Colteryahn Sanitary Dairy v. Milk Control Commission of Pennsylvania, 1 A.2d 775, 332 Pa. 15, 122 A.L.R. 1049.

(5) An order of the secretary of agriculture was not in accordance with the law, where it was impossible to tell from the record whether the secretary weighed the evidence and cast it aside in the exercise of his administrative discretion, or whether the evidence was considered at all.—A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. v. Secretary of Agriculture, C.C.A., 120 F.2d 258.

Determination of issues of fact

In order that the basis for the determination may be definite and certain, and in order that the determination may be reviewed, a duty is imposed on the determining body or officer to set forth the factual grounds of the decision, particularly where the relief sought is denied; and, in a particular case, the findings, although satisfying generally the statutory prerequisites to the issuance of the order, may be deemed inadequate to determine an issue of fact raised by the showing at the hearing.—New York State Guernsey Breeders Co-op. v. Noyes, 30 N.E.2d 471, 284 N.Y. 197, modifying 22 N.Y.S.2d 132, 260 App.Div. 240, followed in 32 N.E.2d 823, 285 N.Y. 523, modifying 21 N.Y.S.2d 347, 260 App.Div. 139, appeal granted 22 N.Y.S.2d 633, 260 App.Div. 841.

Initial finding

Power of milk control board to fix prices of milk did not depend on initial finding by board that it ought to do so, where statute expressed policy and board's powers, one of which was to fix prices.—Supplee-Wills-Jones Milk Co. v. Duryee, 181 A. 908, 116 N.J.Law 75.

On amendment

(1) It is not necessary, on amending an order, to repeat findings previously made, or to make new findings, in respect of matters as to which the amendment makes no change.—H. P. Hood & Sons v. U. S., Mass., 59 S.Ct. 1019, 307 U.S. 588, 83 L.Ed. 1478, affirming, D.C., U. S. v. H. P. Hood & Sons, 26 F.Supp. 672, certiorari granted H. P. Hood & Sons v. U. Wrightwood Dairy Co., C.C.A.Ill., 127 F.2d 907.

Extraneous matters

(1) Where milk marketing order issued by secretary of agriculture was submitted to milk producers for approval after hearings specified in statute, and full text of order with explanatory pamphlets was mailed to each prospective voter, erroneous statements in pamphlets could not be permitted to render submission futile and require an equity court to refuse to enforce order.—U. S. v. Rock Royal Co-op., N.Y., 59 S.Ct. 993, 307 U.S. 533, 83 L.Ed. 1446, modifying, D.C., 26 F.Supp. 534, and rehearing denied 60 S.Ct. 66, 308 U.S. 631, 84 L.Ed. 526, Dairymen's League Cooperative Ass'n v. Rock Royal Co-op., 60 S.Ct. 66, 308 U.S. 631, 84 L.Ed. 526 and Metropolitan Cooperative Milk Producers Bargaining Agency v. Rock Royal Co-op., 60 S.Ct. 67, 308 U.S. 631, 84 L.Ed. 526.

(2) Also, if ulterior motives of corporate aggrandizement stimulated activities of associations of milk producers having a vital interest in establishment of an efficient marketing system in exercising coercion on handlers to agree to marketing order, their efforts were not thereby rendered unlawful and did not require an equity court to refuse to enforce order.—U. S. v. Rock Royal Co-op., supra.

(3) Where secretary of agriculture declared that three fourths of milk producers affected by marketing order issued by him approved its terms, and litigants challenging validity of order did not deny that three fourths of voters voted for institution of order, the courts could not go behind secretary's conclusion to inquire into influences which caused producers to favor order.—U. S. v. Rock Royal Co-op., supra.

unnecessary to pass on its alleged invalidity because of failure to comply with statutory provisions regarding notice, hearing and findings.[2] A regulation must be promulgated, even though no specific method for doing so is prescribed by statute.[3]

Supersedeas

(1) Under statute declaring that no appeal from an order of the milk control commission shall be permitted to act as a supersedeas except on special order, the special order required is one which will preserve the status quo pending the adjudication of the appeal.—Colteryahn Sanitary Dairy v. Milk Control Commission of Pennsylvania, supra.

(2) Where a supersedeas is properly granted, and a dealer does not see fit to file a bond, dealer will be required to pay price fixed by commission until he does file a bond, or until matter is adjudicated, and when bond is filed producer selling to that dealer comes under provisions of act relating to such bonds, since bond given by each dealer pursuant to supersedeas runs only to producers who sell to him, and it does not inure to the benefit of all of the producers in the given milk area.—Colteryahn Sanitary Dairy v. Milk Control Commission of Pennsylvania, supra.

Record

Where major portion of hearings which resulted in order establishing definitions and standards of identity of farina and enriched farina was devoted to flour and most of the findings pertained to flour, on a review of such order, evidence and findings pertaining to flour were properly included in the record, since there is such a close relationship between some grades of flour and farina that it would be impractical to consider the evidence and findings concerning one without giving consideration to the other.—Quaker Oats Co. v. Federal Security Administrator, C.C.A., 129 F.2d 76.

Pleadings

(1) All that is required in an appeal petition is a brief statement of the action complained of, the objections thereto, and sufficient facts to make out a prima facie case.—Harrisburg Dairies v. Milk Control Commission of Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 49 Dauph.Co., Pa., 413.

(2) However, the failure of appellants to state facts in support of their objections, sufficient to constitute a prima facie case as required by statute, is fatal to proceedings.—Colteryahn Sanitary Dairy v. Milk Control Commission of Pennsylvania, 1 A.2d 775, 332 Pa. 15, 122 A.L.R. 1049.

(3) It seems that no penalty is provided for the failure of the milk control commission to file an answer to an appeal petition before the return day, as required by Milk Control Law of April 28, 1937, § 904, P. L. p 417, 31 P.S. § 700j—904, and certainly an appellant cannot contend in a supplemental brief, after the appeal has been argued, that all the facts in the appeal petition must be taken as admitted because the commission's answer, although filed before argument, was not filed until after the return day.—Sando v. Pennsylvania Milk Control Commission, 41 Pa.Dist. & Co. 391.

Evidence

(1) On appeals from orders of the milk control commission, the burden of proof is on appellants.—Colteryahn Sanitary Dairy v. Milk Control Commission of Pennsylvania, 1 A.2d 775, 332 Pa. 15, 122 A.L.R. 1049.

(2) Although the legislature has conferred on the court the right to hear evidence on appeal, the evidence produced in court should be confined to that which was not available to present to the commission and could only be procured after promulgation of the order appealed from.—Colteryahn Sanitary Dairy v. Milk Control Commission of Pennsylvania, supra.

Intervention

Milk Control Commission of Pennsylvania, 1 A.2d 775, 332 Pa. 15, 122 A.L.R. 1049.

Lack of financial interest

Neither cooperative handlers of milk nor a proprietary corporation handling milk could raise issue of lack of statutory authority in secretary of agriculture to issue order authorizing payments to cooperatives and certain handlers from a producer settlement fund where none of them had any financial interest in fund.—U. S. v. Rock Royal Co-op., N.Y., 59 S.Ct. 993, 307 U.S. 533, 83 L.Ed. 1446, modifying, D.C., 26 F.Supp. 534, and rehearing denied 60 S.Ct. 66, 308 U.S. 631, 84 L. Rock Royal Co-op. 60 S.Ct. 67, 308 U.S. 631, 84 L.Ed. 526.

Person who complied with rules of district health board could not con-

cretionary determination will not be reviewed,[7] except for abuse of discretion;[8] and, as expressly provided by some statutes, findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, are binding on the court;[9] but the findings may be reviewed for lack of substantial evidence to support them;[10] and the court is not bound by the conclusions of law arrived at by the officer or agency issuing the order.[11] A finding, practically in the language of the statute, as to the facts necessary to authorize the board to act will be construed by the court as a determination by the board that such facts actually exist, especially where the statute provides that the board's findings on questions properly before it shall be deemed prima facie lawful and reasonable.[12] The court may remand or return the cause to the board, commission, or administrator for further and proper consideration of the evidence,[13] the reception of additional evidence,[14] or the making of supplementary findings;[15] and, where it has retained jurisdiction, the supplementary findings have been made, and they were required only by the court as a convenience in the review proceeding, and not by statute to give validity to the promulgating order, it may make a final disposition of the case in the light of such findings.[16]

A person dissatisfied with an order should utilize the remedy of review provided by statute before resorting to a suit for injunction to contest the validity of the order;[17] and he may be precluded from questioning the order collaterally on a ground which was not presented at the hearing before the commission or by appeal from the order.[18]

§ 5. —— Power of States Generally

The right of a state to regulate food is referable to its inherent police power.

A food regulation is within the general scope of the police power inherent in a state;[19] and, where the regulation is reasonable and suitable and not violative of constitutional provisions, it is a proper and valid exercise of such power.[20] Proper subjects of regulation under the police power of a state include: The citrus fruit industry;[21] the milk industry;[22] the making and sale of bread;[23] the sale of meat[24] or nonintoxicating malt liquors;[25] and the marketing of farm products.[26] The authority of the police power, as applied to food, extends to requiring a fixed minimum amount of nutritional elements.[27]

§ 6. —— Validity of State Statutes

With some exceptions, state regulatory statutes pertaining to food have been held constitutional.

The legislature of a state may take steps to prevent adulteration of food;[28] may determine in what places,[29] and at what time,[30] food may be sold; and in general regulate the conditions and business of producing, manufacturing, handling, and distributing food.[31] Legislative enactments having for their object the regulation or prohibition of the production, sale, or use of articles of food are presumed to be constitutional,[32] and will be sustained

Public interest or welfare

(1) The milk business or industry of a state is affected with a public interest and hence is subject to regulation in the exercise of the police power of the state.
Ala.—Taylor v. State ex rel. Alabama State Milk Control Board, 186 So. 463, 237 Ala. 178.

Vt.—State v. Auclair, 4 A.2d 107, 110 Vt. 147.

(2) It bears such relation to the welfare of those dependent on the use of milk as to be clothed with a public interest and subject to regulation under the police power.—Jersey Maid Milk Products Co. v. Brock, 91 P.2d 577, 13 Cal.2d 620.

(3) The milk industry bears a close relation to the public welfare and is sufficiently clothed with a public interest to warrant its regulation under exercise of the police power, not only in emergencies but at all times.—Ray v. Parker, 101 P.2d 665, 15 Cal.2d 275.

(4) The milk industry is of public concern, and may be regulated in the public interest, in the exercise of the police power of the state.—Green v. Milk Control Commission of Pennsylvania, 48 Dauph.Co., Pa., 385.

(5) The distribution of milk is a "business affected with a public interest," which is equivalent to saying that it is subject to the exercise of the police power, in the sense that he who enters the business of producing, selling, or distributing milk or its products subjects to regulation not only those efforts on his part which affect the quality of the product as it reaches the consumer, but also the property which he contributes to the enterprise.—Stracquadanio v. Department of Health of City of New York, 32 N.E.2d 806, 285 N.Y. 93, affirming 20 N.Y.S.2d 965, 259 App.Div. 994, affirming 20 N.Y.S.2d 964, appeal denied 21 N.Y.S.2d 611, 259 App.Div. 1073.

Adequate supply of essential article
Where economic conditions and business practices are likely to interfere with adequate supply of an essential article of food, the legislature is authorized to provide a remedy for the situation.—State v. Auclair, 4 A.2d 107, 110 Vt. 147.

Exercise of care to protect consumers
It is within the power of the legislature, acting in interests of the people, to require manufacturers and retailers of food intended for human consumption to exercise care to protect persons consuming such food, even to the extent of making manufacturers and retailers "insurers" of their products, provided there is no discrimination in the application of such regulation.—Catalanello v. Cudahy Packing Co., 27 N.Y.S.2d 637.

Dairy industry, sale of products, and prices

(1) The legislature has power to regulate the dairy industry in the public interest, and to fix prices as an incident, irrespective of whether a temporary emergency is the subject of regulation.—Noyes v. Erie & Wyoming Farmers Co-op. Corporation, 10 N.Y.S.2d 114, 170 Misc. 42, reversed on other grounds 22 N.E.2d 334, 281 N.Y. 187.

(2) The general assembly may, by proper legislation, regulate the sale of milk and milk products in the state and provide for the fixing of prices of milk and milk products.—State v. Stoddard, 13 A.2d 586, 126 Conn. 623.

(3) It has been said, however, that while the legislature undoubtedly has power so to regulate the sale of dairy products as reasonably to insure purity, it may regulate sale of dairy products only so far as protection of public health requires, and beyond this, marketing of such products is matter of right.—Whitney v. Watson, 157 A. 78, 85 N.H. 238.

statute has been limited to particular provisions thereof;[55] but in a few states such laws have been held unconstitutional either entirely or as to their main features.[56] Particular statutes of different scope which have been held constitutional include acts regulating the sale of milk;[57] for the protection of milk against contamination by bacteria, disease germs, or bacilli;[58] dealing with the grading of milk and cream obtained from producers for commercial use;[59] forbidding the sale of milk below a certain standard of quality,[60] or of milk from cows fed by still slop,[61] or of skimmed milk without making it known that it is such;[62] regulating the manufacture and sale of "renovated butter;"[63] prohibiting the sale of imitation butter, except in sealed packages, marked with the name and address of the manufacturer;[64] prohibiting the use, by a person, firm, or corporation dealing in substitute dairy products of certain words as part of a trade or corporate name or in describing the product in advertising matter or on labels, packages, or containers;[65] fixing a standard of butter fat for ice cream [66] and dairy products made in the semblance of ice cream;[67] and regulating the preparation and sale of condensed milk.[68] A statute allowing dealers in unadvertised milk to sell it at a price lower than that of milk sold under a well-advertised trade name is valid,[69] unless it is limited to dealers engaged in business on the effective date of the statute and does not extend to dealers becoming such subsequent to that date.[70]

There is a conflict of authority as to the validity of state statutes, known as filled milk acts, which prohibit the manufacture or sale of milk, or milk products or derivatives, to which has been added any fat or oil other than milk fat, they being held constitutional in some states,[71] and unconstitutional in others.[72]

It has been held in a number of cases that a state may absolutely prohibit the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine.[73] According to a number of authorities, however, as oleomargarine, when properly made, is a wholesome food product, statutes entirely prohibiting its manufacture or sale are invalid.[74] At any rate, the legislature may legally require that oleomargarine shall be sold for what it is and not for butter, and that in making such sales foreign substances shall not be added to it to make it resemble butter;[75] may prohibit any person selling oleomargarine from selling, giving, or delivering with it any coloring matter;[76] or may require the use of oleomargarine to be published on bills of fare and in placards.[77] Also, statutory provisions as to advertising, vitamin content, and inspection of oleomargarine may be reasonable regulations under the police power of the state.[78] An act prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine unless it shall be of some other color than that of yellow butter has been sustained;[79] but, on the other hand, a similar statute prohibiting the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine of a shade or tint of yellow has been held void as to such product, where it is not injurious to health and the color has been produced as a natural result of the ingredients used.[80] Statutes requiring oleomargarine or other articles sold as a substitute for butter to be colored pink have been held valid;[81] but, as appears in Commerce § 65, they have also been held invalid. The validity of state statutes relating to oleomargarine as against an objection that they interfere with interstate commerce is considered in Commerce §§ 65, 86.

Provisions in milk-control or other statutes, requiring certain classes of persons dealing in milk to obtain a license[82] and to give a bond to secure payment for milk purchased,[83] and authorizing revocation of the license for enumerated reasons,[84] have generally been considered constitutional; but there is some authority for the view that a requirement of a bond is unconstitutional;[85] and it seems that a statute providing for a license to sell dairy products would be unconstitutional if it vested unguided and uncontrolled discretion in a city board of health as to the issuance of the license.[86]

Other statutes. Among statutes that have been upheld by the courts as constitutional are those providing for the inspection of food stuffs,[87] and requiring the payment of a reasonable inspection fee;[88] requiring the producers of, or dealers in, certain foods to take out a license;[89] forbidding the sale of food products below a certain standard of quality;[90] regulating the sale of cold storage eggs [91] and food stuffs;[92] requiring the sale of eggs according to established grades;[93] regulating potato sales;[94] prohibiting and punishing the sale of meat falsely represented to be "kosher;"[95] prohibiting the sale for food of meat of an animal that has died otherwise than by slaughter;[96] prohibiting the sale as an article of food of veal from a calf under a certain age when killed;[97] making the use of sulphur or sulphurous acid in articles of human food illegal;[98] prohibiting the sale of food containing boric acid [99] or benzoate of soda;[1] prohibiting the use of saccharin in bottled soft drinks;[2] prohibiting the adulteration of food by coloring, whereby inferiority is concealed or it is made to appear better than it really is, but providing that nothing in the act shall prevent the coloring of pure butter;[3] prohibiting the coloring of vinegar;[4] requiring the labeling of proprietary foods and syrups;[5] requiring the markings on honey containers to show the name of the producer, weight, and grade;[6] denouncing the mislabeling, for marketing purposes, of fruits, nuts, or vegetables;[7] and providing that food products sold in package form shall be deemed misbranded if the package contains any gifts, premiums, or prizes.[8] A statute making it an offense to sell unwholesome food, irrespective of whether the seller knows it to be unwholesome, is valid.[9] On the other hand, statutes have been declared void which require the name of the manufacturer and the location of his factory to be stated on each container,[10] or require the exact weight of a package to be marked in letters of a certain size,[11] or which are so vague or uncertain as not to be intelligible.[12] Also, a statute penalizing the failure to mark packages of food stuffs with the net weight of contents is unconstitutional as applied to food stuffs which are subject to variations in weight according to climatic conditions.[13]

§ 7. —— Power of Congress

A federal statute concerning food, or a manufacturer thereof, or dealer therein, is sustainable when it is a proper exercise by congress of one of the powers conferred on it by the constitution, such as the power of taxation, the power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce, or the power to legislate for the District of Columbia.

Under its power to legislate for the District of Columbia, congress may pass laws for the reasonable regulation of the sale of food products within the District.[14]

Whether congress may legislate concerning food or manufacturers thereof, or dealers therein, in the exercise of its power of taxation is considered in the C.J.S. title Internal Revenue, also 33 C.J. p 326 note 4, p 330 notes 74, 75, p 331 note 1, and whether it may so legislate in the exercise of its power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce is considered in Commerce §§ 65, 86, 98. Particular federal statutes relating or applicable to food which have been upheld include the Food and Drugs Act,[15] the Filled Milk Act,[16] the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937,[17] an act prohibiting the importation of inferior tea see Commerce § 65 and Customs Duties § 30 b, and a statute prohibiting producing in, or sending into, the District of Columbia for sale milk, cream, or ice cream without a health officer's permit.[18]

§ 8. —— Conflict between State and Federal Power

Little conflict has been found to exist between the regulatory power of a state as to food and the exercised or unexercised power of congress to legislate on the same subject.

State statutes are not necessarily void as to products imported from a foreign country,[19] or transported from one state to another,[20] nor are they necessarily nullified or otherwise affected by the subsequent enactment by congress of a statute forbidding the importation or interstate shipment of adulterated articles of food.[21] The validity of state food statutes as against an objection that they regulate, burden, interfere with, or discriminate against foreign or interstate commerce or conflict with acts of congress on the same subject is considered in Commerce §§ 65, 86. In the absence of conflict between state and federal statutes, a broad latitude is allowed the states in protecting their citizens from adulterated or misbranded articles of food.[22]

§ 9. —— Powers of Municipal Corporations

The authority of a municipality to enact regulatory ordinances pertaining to food is part of the police power delegated to the municipality; and a particular ordinance of this nature will be sustained when, and only when, it is within the scope, and is a proper exercise, of the power delegated.

As stated in Constitutional Law § 178, the police power of the state may be delegated by it to municipal corporations within the state; and regulatory municipal ordinances pertaining to food are valid, provided they are within the general scope of the state's police power,[23] provided they are authorized by the municipal charter[24] or are authorized by

Considerations affecting amount

The license fee which a municipality may exact for purpose of regulating sale of foods is limited to an amount which will bear some reasonable relation to the additional burdens and expenses imposed on the city; but mere probability that license fee may exceed, in some degree, expense of issuing license and inspecting business, will not render ordinance invalid as a revenue measure.—Larson v. nated as a congested one.[50] However an ordinance restricting the sale of perishable foods to inspection hours is invalid where it is so framed as to be applicable only to operators of grocery stores and meat markets and not to operators of restaurants, drug stores, or similar establishments where foods are prepared for sale;[51] and while there is authority that an ordinance restricting the hours during which uncured and uncooked meats may be sold at an established place of business may be valid,[52] there is also authority that such an ordinance is invalid.[53] The statutory power of a municipality to engage in the purchase and sale of food must be exercised in the manner or method prescribed by statute.[54]

As to bread, bakers, and bakeries. In the exercise of its general police powers,[55] as, for instance, under its power to protect the health of the inhabitants,[56] a municipal corporation may, within reasonable limits, regulate the trade or occupation of bakers and their places of business.[57] It may regulate the sale of bread or other food products of bakeries[58] and the sanitary conditions under which they are produced;[59] it may prescribe the size[60] and quality[61] of loaves of bread; and it may require the name of the maker to be stated on the package or container in which bread is sold;[62] but, while municipal regulations dealing with the weight of bread have been upheld in some cases,[63] they have been held invalid in other cases.[64] An ordinance prohibiting all deliveries of bakery goods during certain hours is not justified;[65] and an ordinance is void where it is an attempt by the municipality to exercise, without legislative authority, extraterritorial jurisdiction over bakeries located outside the city.[66] Also an ordinance requiring bakery products baked outside the municipal limits to be unwrapped, inspected, and rewrapped has been condemned.[67]

As to milk and milk products. A municipal corporation may enact ordinances reasonably regulating the production,[68] preparation,[69] handling,[70] distribution,[71] delivery,[72] and sale[73] of milk for consumption by its inhabitants. So also it may regulate the manufacture[74] and sale[75] of ice cream or other milk products. Particular ordinances which have been sustained include those which: Protect milk against contamination by bacteria, disease germs, or bacilli;[76] regulate dairies;[77] regulate the care and feeding of milch cows;[78] prohibit the sale of milk drawn from cows not previously subjected to certain tests;[79] require inspection of milk, milch cows, stables where kept, etc.;[80] require milk wagons to be kept neatly painted;[81] require the immediate cleaning of receptacles used in the transportation and delivery of milk;[82] require milk peddlers to provide a special room for storing milk and for cleansing utensils as a condition to obtaining licenses;[83] denounce adulteration of milk;[84] prohibit the sale of milk containing a preservative[85] or coloring matter;[86] prohibit the sale of milk[87] or cream[88] below a certain standard; or prohibit the sale of bottled chocolate milk containing less than a prescribed percentage of butter fat.[89]

While a municipal corporation may require a person selling milk or milk products within the city to obtain a license[90] or permit[91] and pay a reasonable license,[92] permit,[93] or inspection[94] fee, it may not confer arbitrary and capricious power on an officer to discriminate improperly in granting or withholding permits.[95]

Ordinarily, a municipal corporation may prohibit the sale of milk at retail,[96] or in certain places,[97] except in sealed bottles, as well as require the capacity thereof to be stated on bottles of milk.[98] However, a city has no authority to outlaw paper or single service containers where they have been legalized by the state.[99] While an ordinance requiring the use of a bottle or other container bearing a name, trade-name or trade-mark truly and correctly showing the identity of the producer or distributor would be valid,[1] an ordinance is invalid where it goes further and prohibits the use of a bottle or other container bearing any other name, as it precludes the use of the name of the manufacturer of the bottle and such name could not reasonably mislead the consumer or have any relation to his health.[2]

Notwithstanding some authority to the contrary,[3] it is held that a city may require the pasteurization of milk,[4] or of all milk except certified milk,[5] and prescribe reasonable regulations under which it shall be done or conducted,[6] as by requiring that it be done or conducted in a particular manner[7] or according to reasonable standards of perfection;[8] but an ordinance requiring the pasteurization to be done within the city is invalid[9] as to producers whose dairies, although located outside the city, are in a district having the same inspection service as the municipality, where such inspection district or service has been approved, as provided by statute, by a state official,[10] although such an ordinance has been held valid as to milk brought in from another inspection district,[11] and an ordinance prohibiting the sale in the city of ice cream not pasteurized and frozen on the same premises in the city has also been held valid.[12]

As to soft or nonintoxicating drinks. Under a statute authorizing it to regulate "other provisions," a city has authority to regulate soft drinks.[13] While, under its general police power, in the absence of express authority, a municipal corporation may not absolutely prohibit the sale of nonintoxicating drinks,[14] especially where the state has licensed the sale thereof,[15] the business of selling such drinks may be a proper subject of municipal regulation,[16] especially where the places where it is conducted may become mere covers for illegal liquor traffic[17] or centers for crime and meeting places for criminals.[18] In the exercise of the power the corporation may provide for the inspection of such establishments by designated public officials; it may require that samples of beverages on sale be furnished for examination or analysis; it may require an unobstructed view of the interior of the establishment; and, within reasonable limits, it may regulate the opening and closing hours of business.[19] Also it may require that a license be obtained for the conduct of the business of selling nonintoxicating drinks;[20] but, in the absence of express authority, it is without power to require licenses from persons engaged in driving trucks for the delivery of nonintoxicating beverages to retail dealers.[21]

It is within the police power of a municipal corporation to regulate the sale of cider.[22] In the exercise of that power, it may prohibit the sale of cider in smaller quantities than that specified,[23] and it may forbid the drinking thereof at the place of sale.[24]

While the use of saccharin in nonalcoholic carbonated drinks or beverages may not be prohibited entirely, even indirectly by making its use practically impossible,[25] its presence in such drinks or beverages may properly be required to be made known to the public by a proper label.[26]

§ 10. Construction and Operation of Regulations Generally

Valid food regulations are construed, if possible, so as to give effect to the intent or purpose of their enactment and to the usual and ordinary meaning of the language employed therein. As so construed, and within their intended and legitimate scope, they are operative and will be accorded effect.

An authorized municipal ordinance pertaining to food has the force of law and is as obligatory within the municipality as though enacted by the legislature.[27] Food regulations, whether consisting of statutes, ordinances, or rules or orders of a board or like agency, are subject to general rules of con-

Declared or executed intent

The extent to which the legislature has regulated the milk industry is not to be determined by its sweeping declaration of the power which it intended to give to the commission, but by the language which it used in actually bestowing power on the commission.—Green v. Milk control act should not be emasculated by unduly technical construction.—United Milk Producers of California v. Cecil, 118 P.2d 830, 47 Cal.App.2d 758.

Handler

(1) Where milk produced in a certain marketing area was handled in current of interstate commerce, persons engaged continuously in purchasing milk from producers or other handlers, and processing, distributing, and handling milk in such area in competition with all other handlers in area, were "handlers" of milk in current of interstate commerce, so as to be subject to order of secretary of agriculture regulating handlers of milk in such area.—U. S. v. Beck, D.C.Iowa, 36 F.Supp. 307.

(2) A person is a handler within the meaning of such an order where, although he deals in milk produced and sold wholly within the state, about half of the milk produced for sale in the marketing area is actually moved in interstate commerce while being brought to market, and the milk which he handles is sold in the market in active competition with milk brought there in interstate commerce.—U. S. v. Adler's Creamery, C.C.A.N.Y., 107 F.2d 987.

Distributor

Provisions in milk control act defining distributor as meaning any person whether or not such person is a producer or an association of producers, engaged in business of distributing or handling fluid milk, and defining person as meaning an individual, firm, corporation, association, or any other business unit, indicated a legislative intent to include all associations within scope of act. Coöperative marketing associations are "distributors" for their members, and therefore are subject to operation and control of the act.—United Milk Producers of California v. Cecil, 118 P.2d 830, 47 Cal.App.2d 758.

"Any person"

Shipment by a warehouseman, not a manufacturer or dealer, of adulterated or misbranded articles of food from one state to another was within the Pure Food and Drugs Act forbidding such shipment by "any person."—U. S. v. Buffalo Cold Storage Co., D.C.N.Y., 179 F. 865.

The term "cane sugar", as used in a statute, was construed to include beet sugar.—Curtice Bros. Co. v. Barnard, Ind., 209 F. 589, 126 C.C.A. 411.

The term "common table salt", as used in a statute, was construed to include rock salt.—Curtice Bros. Co. v. Barnard, supra.

given a construction that will render them intelligible and valid rather than vague and contradictory, or otherwise void.[40] An act relating to a specific article takes precedence over a general statute.[41]

A food law will not have a retroactive effect, unless its express letter or clearly manifested intention requires that it should have such effect.[42] It continues in effect without reference to the continuance of an economic depression.[43]

A state food law does not apply to the governor of a home for federal soldiers established by and operated under an act of congress;[44] but a state milk control act, or a reasonable order or regulation made thereunder by a state milk control board or commission, applies to, and must be obeyed by, a person selling milk in the state, even though he deals with the United States government, as by selling milk for consumption on a military reservation or in a veterans' hospital, or other federal institution.[45] That a food product is prepared by a process which is or has been protected by letter patent of the United States does not prevent it from coming within the operation of laws passed by a state in the exercise of its police powers.[46] A state statute forbidding the shipment of unwholesome articles applies to all shipments of such articles whether intra-state or interstate.[47]

Statutory bond. Where a milk dealer has given a statutory bond guaranteeing payment to producers, recovery may be had on the bond [48] in a proper action [49] wherein there are proper parties [50] and a cause of action is proved [51] or a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, contained in the bond, is exercised.[52] Defendant cannot properly inject results flowing from his own inaction as a defense to a suit on the bond.[53] The principal matter to be litigated in such a suit is whether or not there has been a default in the condition of the bond;[54] and the official bringing suit is not required to give no-

The term "distributor," as defined by an act dealing with the stabilization and marketing of fluid milk and cream, refers to distributors of fluid milk and cream, and does not include those who manufacture and sell dairy products.—Ex parte Willing, 86 P.2d 663, 12 Cal.2d 591.

Store or operator thereof

(1) Distributing plants where milk is collected, pasteurized, and distributed by solicitors working on a commission basis are not "stores" within a milk control law or a statute imposing a privilege tax on retailers.—Lee v. Poinsettia Dairy Products, 200 So. 369, 145 Fla. 610.

(2) A person who operates a store from which he regularly sells milk, the average daily sale being from one to one and one-half gallons, and who by a printed sign on front of building occupied by him as a store and residence advertises milk for sale, and who sells milk to the general public, is not a person who sells milk on a "non-commercial basis" within the Milk Control Act, L. 1937 p 247.—McKinney v. State, 199 S.E. 115, 186 Ga. 886.

"Standard milk bottles"

An ordinance requiring that milk and milk products, when sold in quantities of less than one gallon, be delivered in "standard milk bottles," referred to the glass milk bottle in common use, and not to paper containers.—Fieldcrest Dairies v. City of Chicago, C.C.A.Ill., 122 F.2d 132, reversing, D.C., 35 F.Supp. 451.

"Final"

Under milk control act, after first election resulting in a vote against adoption of act in a particular area, designated a milk shed, a second election may be had, since expression in act that declaration of result of any such election shall be "final" merely means that there shall be no judicial interference with declaration of result as made by the board and does not mean that another election shall not be had.—Gibbs v. tice to claimants to file their claims until he has recovered on the bond and has something to distribute.[55] Particular producers, for whose benefit additional security has been given, need not realize on such security before sharing in the distribution of the proceeds of the statutory bond;[56] and, where the proceeds are insufficient to satisfy all claims, the balance owing on each claim may be considered a claim against the general estate of the producer in the hands of receivers for distribution.[57] A particular state statute is construed to limit participation in the proceeds to producers resident in the state.[58]

The bond applies automatically to new prices fixed by order of a board during the effective period of the bond;[59] but it does not apply to transactions between dealers.[60] A statutory citrus dealer's bond is not retroactive and does not cover obligations created before, and existing on, its effective date.[61]

§ 11. Amendment and Repeal of Regulations

General rules are resorted to in determining whether or not there has been an amendment or repeal of a food regulation and, if so, the effect thereof.

An existing statute or ordinance relating to food is repealed by a subsequent one covering the whole of the same subject matter, and intended as a substitute for the former,[62] or, to the extent of the inconsistency, by a subsequent inconsistent one;[63] but repeal by implication is not favored;[64] and the later act will be regarded as merely an additional regulation where it does not cover the same subject matter or is not so repugnant to the earlier statute that both may not be enforced together.[65] The enactment of a pure food law by the legislature does not operate to repeal an existing law authorizing municipal corporations to pass ordinances to promote the public health.[66] The later act may sometimes continue, rather than repeal, the earlier one,[67] or it may continue and extend the earlier act, as amended, for a specified period of time.[68] An amendment does not affect orders previously issued,[69] nor does it necessarily invalidate a petition previously filed and partially acted on, or prevent its use as a basis for a new plan conforming to the amendment.[70] The repeal of a statute requiring a bond does not take away the protection of a bond in reliance on which transactions took place while the statute was in force.[71]

§ 12. License, Inspection, Marking, and Branding

a. License or permit
b. Inspection
c. Marking, branding, or labeling

a. License or Permit

A valid and applicable statute or ordinance relating to a license or permit to manufacture or deal in a designated kind of food is binding and controlling on both a manufacturer or dealer within its terms and the officer, board, or commission charged with duties in respect of the issuance, revocation, or suspension of the license or permit. A refusal or revocation of a license is reviewable.

It is necessary to comply with a valid and applicable statute or ordinance requiring a manufacturer of, or dealer in, certain articles of food,[72] such as bread,[73] citrus fruit,[74] fish,[75] oleomargarine,[76] or renovated butter,[77] to obtain a license and

The judicial review of the act of an official in revoking or suspending a license is, when provided for by statute only in general terms, limited to that permissible under the common-law writ of certiorari.[86]

To deal in milk or milk products. The activities of a particular person in the milk industry may not be of such a character as to bring him within a valid statute, ordinance, or other regulation requiring a milk dealer or a dealer in milk products to obtain a license or permit.[87] On the other hand, where he is within the application of such a regulation, he not only must obtain the required license or permit before making further sales,[88] but he is entitled to a license or permit on application therefor, as well as to a continuance thereof, without suspension or revocation, for the prescribed term, and to a renewal on the expiration of the term, unless the lawfully prescribed conditions to issuance of the license or permit are not fulfilled or there is adequate legal ground for denial, suspension, or revocation[89] and the proceedings leading

In "fruit and vegetable ordinance" requiring higher license fees for nonestablished wholesale dealers than for established dealers, and defining "established dealer" as one occupying a regularly established building, store, or warehouse and having other qualifications, the word "building" was used in its most restricted sense, not including stalls and open booths, and hence persons operating stalls in market were not entitled to license as "established dealers."—Netter v. earing and evidence

(1) Health board issuing license sell milk may prescribe uniform ıd reasonable rules respecting the me, place, and extent of hearings ı applications and fixing the minium requirements as to the characr and quantity of evidence, such gulations not being the imposition additional conditions on an applint, to receive a license, but being ermissible procedural rules incidental to the discharge of the duties imposed on it.—Whitney v. Watson, 157 A. 78, 85 N.H. 238.

(2) Petitioner may not complain of act of commissioner of agriculture and markets in fixing place and time for holding of hearing unless such determination is arbitrary or capricious.—Linden Farms Milk & Cream Co. v. Ten Eyck, 284 N.Y.S. 721, 246 App.Div. 869, appeal dismissed 3 N. E.2d 473, 271 N.Y. 661.

(3) However, the proceeding is jurisdictionally defective where it is held a shorter time after the applicant's receipt of notice than that prescribed by statute.—Dairy Distributers v. Department of Agriculture and Markets, 280 N.W. 400, 228 Wis. 418.

(4) Also, difficulty in establishing by proof classification of milk purchased by dealer with regard to price fixing does not justify milk control board in disregarding fundamental laws of evidence or failure to prove by competent evidence violation of milk control act in proceedings for revocation of license.—Royce v. Rosasco, 287 N.Y.S. 692, 159 Misc. 236.

(5) Statute providing for revoking milk dealer's license requires hearing before impartial tribunal, confrontation of licensee by complainant, licensee's representation by counsel, and that he have opportunity to produce witnesses.—Grandview Dairy v. Baldwin, 269 N.Y.S. 116, 239 App.Div. 640.

(6) A single member of state milk control board is authorized by statute to hear and record evidence in proceedings for revocation of milk producer-distributor's license and submit such evidence to all members of board for final determination.—Thompson v. Alabama State Milk Control Board, 1 So.2d 381, 241 Ala. 100.

Findings generally

Pleadings, affidavits, return, and issues

(1) Where milk dealer's license was canceled by commissioner of agriculture because of price cutting, attaching to petition to review commissioner's determination affidavit setting forth that dealer was being furnished milk by dairy at a price satisfactory to dealer and dairy was not improper, notwithstanding affidavit was extrinsic to record on which commissioner based his determination, since, in so far as dealer might be entitled to mandamus to compel commissioner to reinstate license, affidavit might be material as showing why commissioner's action was illegal.—Marian Creamery Corporation v. Noyes, 3 N.Y.S.2d 5, 254 App.Div. 618.

(2) Where applicant for milk dealer's license sought a review of denial of application by certiorari, applicant was entitled to have findings of fact stricken from return of commissioner of agriculture and markets, where findings were of date subsequent to that of denial of application.—Highland Farms v. Ten Eyck, 293 N.Y.S. 761, 250 App.Div. 793.

preventing an applicant or licensee from engaging in a business which is otherwise lawful;[93] but the conclusion of the officer or board should not be disturbed where it is reasonably supported by findings of requisite facts and such findings are in turn supported by substantial evidence.[94] The officer or board is vested with discretion,[95] at least in determining whether the requisite facts have been shown,[96] and to the extent that the action or determination is discretionary it will not be reviewed except for an arbitrary and capricious exercise thereof [97] or lack of any scope for the reasonable exercise thereof in the manner complained of.[98] The court, on annulling the officer's determination, will not direct the officer to issue a license where the record does not conclusively establish that the applicant is entitled thereto.[99] Under statutory authority, it may, in a proper case, remit the record to the officer, board, or commission for the taking of further testimony.[1] Where the period of the suspension of a license is unreasonably long under the circumstances, the court will reduce it.[2]

A blanket license issued to the trade in general should not be so formulated as to be beyond the power delegated by statute to the official issuing it.[3]

A license which by its terms is limited to a restricted territory cannot be correctly interpreted to cover additional territory;[4] but where an extension to cover other territory has been granted without an application therefor, the licensee has no ground for complaint.[5] A denial of an application for extension or modification of a license in respect of territory or other matters may be proper on the showing made;[6] but it will be annulled where it is arbitrary.[7]

An action to restrain an official from canceling a license is premature where the official is merely conducting a hearing and the license has not been, and may not be, revoked;[8] but such a procedural objection is purely formal and not substantial, in a suit to restrain the official from enforcing a blanket license against plaintiff, where the official form-board or to appeal from its findings and order fixing milk prices was thereby precluded on appeal from revocation of his milk dealer's license from complaining that board had apparently failed to make definite findings of fact, especially in view of his admission that facts found were correct.—Rohrer v. Milk Control Board, 186 A. 336, 322 Pa. 257.

(5) On appeal from decision of court of common pleas sustaining order of milk control board revoking milk dealer's license, milk dealer was not entitled to raise issues not presented to court of common pleas, in view of express statutory provision and general rule that superior court will not consider law questions not raised in lower court.—Eisenhart v. ally and definitely takes the position that plaintiff is subject to the license and has violated it, and various people in the trade have been warned not to deal with plaintiff as a violator of the license;[9] and where the license is not applicable to plaintiff he is not obliged to exhaust administrative procedure before bringing suit.[10]

A license fee accompanying an application may not, on denial of the application, be recovered back from an official where, under the statutes, the fee is absorbed in a general fund, the official has no authority to repay the applicant, and any duty to make reimbursement is the duty of the state.[11]

b. Inspection

The courts accord proper construction and effect to food inspection laws.

Provided they have not been repealed,[12] valid statutes, ordinances, and rules and regulations having the force of law, relating to the inspection of meats or other designated articles of food, or of the premises where they are manufactured, prepared, or sold,[13] and requiring the payment of an inspection fee by the producer or dealer,[14] or otherwise relating to payment of the cost of inspection,[15] will be given effect to the extent that, as properly construed, they are applicable. So too an express exemption in an inspection statute or ordinance will, when applicable, be accorded effect;[16] and a limitation of the exemption, not found in the statute or ordinance, will not be read into it.[17] There is no right to recover back market inspection fees which, although excessive, have been paid under an existing ordinance and expended for public purposes.[18]

c. Marking, Branding, or Labeling

Statutes relating to the marking, branding, or labeling of articles of food, or the containers thereof, are construed by the courts and, as so construed, are or are not given effect accordingly as they are or are not applicable.

Federal[19] and state[20] statutes relating to the marking, branding, or labeling of articles of food, or the containers thereof, have been construed and, as so construed, accorded or not accorded effect accordingly as they were or were not applicable, although the question, considered infra § 23, most frequently arising under such statutes is what constitutes a misbranding in violation thereof. State statutes of this nature are deemed not to refer to cases of private consumption of food, but rather to deal with articles or packages as put into, or sold in, commerce and to refer to labels used in marketing;[21] and, although they may disclose an intent to impose the duty of marking or labeling on the manufacturer,[22] they do not require him to perform this duty until the processes of manufacture are complete.[23] Some of the statutes, in their use of the words "mark" and "label," do not manifest an intent to make any particular distinction between them.[24] Statutes requiring a statement on a con-

§ 13. Taking Samples for Analysis

Statutory provisions are controlling as to the rights and duties of officers and sellers in respect of the taking of samples of suspected foods or food products by officers for the purpose of analysis.

Effect is accorded statutes providing for the taking of samples of suspected merchandise by certain officers, for the purpose of analysis, and making it compulsory on sellers to furnish such samples on demand by the proper officer and compliance by him with the statutory formalities;[25] but the sample must not be taken from a part of the article offered for sale which does not fairly represent the whole;[26] and a mere agent of the officer, acting without authority, cannot compel a dealer to give a sample against his will.[27] When so provided by statute, the taker of a sample for analysis must divide it, on demand, or in some cases without demand, into a specified number of parts, or take duplicate samples, and deliver one of such parts or duplicate samples to the seller;[28] but in the absence of a statutory provision making it the duty of the taker of a sample for analysis to leave a part of it with the seller it seems that the seller cannot compel the prosecution to furnish him with such a part.[29] In the absence of statutory provision therefor, payment for the sample taken is not a condition precedent to the right to demand a sample.[30]

§ 14. Quantity and Price

To the extent that, as properly construed, they are applicable, valid statutes, ordinances, or orders relating to the quantity or price of articles of food sold must be complied with; but, by virtue of express provision, some variation or tolerance is generally permissible in respect of quantity.

It is necessary to comply with valid and applicable statutes or ordinances prescribing the weight of loaves of bread sold[31] or requiring, in the case of all or certain articles of food sold in containers or package form, the actual or net quantity of the contents to be stated or marked on the outside of the container or package in terms of weight, measure, or numerical count;[32] but where the statutes or ordinances provide, as they generally do, for variations or tolerances, it is not necessary that the actual weight be the same as that marked on the wrapper, container, or package;[33] and if they provide for the establishment of variations or tolerances by rules and regulations by a designated official it is mandatory on him to prescribe such rules and regulations.[34] Statutes or ordinances of this character must be given a proper and reasonable construction.[35] By virtue of an exemption or exception therein, the statute may not apply in respect of transactions between a wholesaler and a retailer;[36] and a statute making it an offense for dealers in certain articles of food to refuse to sell them in small quantities may have only a limited application.[37]

"Buy," "sell," "purchase," or "purchased"

(1) Since the words "buy," "sell," and "purchase," are not defined in the Milk Control Law of 1937, P.L. 417, 31 P.S. § 700j–101 et seq, they are to be interpreted as an ordinary man would use them; to interpret such words to mean "consignment," would produce an oddity or strained meaning which the legislature did not contemplate.—Green v. Milk Control Commission of Pennsylvania, 48 Dauph.Co. 385, affirmed 16 A.2d 9, 340 Pa. 1, followed in Harrisburg Dairies v. Milk Control Commission, 16 A.2d 12, certiorari denied Milk Control Commission of Commonwealth of Pennsylvania v. Green, 61 S.Ct. 826, 312 U.S. 708, 85 L.Ed. 1140.

(2) The word "purchased" means acquired for marketing.—U. S. v. Rock Royal Co-op., N.Y., 59 S.Ct. 993, 307 U.S. 533, 83 L.Ed. 1446, modifying, D.C., 26 F.Supp. 534, rehearing denied 60 S.Ct. 66, 308 U.S. 631, 84 L. Ed. 526, Dairymen's League Cooperative Ass'n v. Different kinds of milk

(1) Under statutes relating to stabilization and marketing of fluid milk and fluid cream and defining fluid milk as milk produced in conformity with quality standards prescribed for "market milk," which is defined as milk supplied to the consumer in the natural fluid state or prepared for human consumption without being converted into any other form or product as distinguished from "manufacturing milk," which is not defined, "manufacturing milk" comprises and includes all milk supplied or prepared for human consumption except market or fluid milk.—Jersey Maid

c (15), for administrative review by the secretary of agriculture of the action of a market administrator, a federal court will not interfere in the first instance with allegedly improper details of administration of a milk marketing order by the market administrator;[50] and its review of a ruling of the secretary as to the correctness of the action of the administrator extends and is limited to a determination of whether the ruling is in accordance with law.[51]

§ 15. Purity and Quality

Various valid regulations defining and forbidding adulteration, or otherwise dealing with the purity and quality, of food or particular kinds of food have been construed and given or not given effect, accordingly as they were or were not applicable.

When, as properly construed, they are applicable, but not otherwise, effect is given to valid statutes, ordinances, or other regulations, relating to articles of food introduced into commerce, or sold, or intended to be sold, which prohibit the production of such articles under certain conditions;[52] fix a standard for articles of food that may be sold;[53] forbid adulteration of articles of food;[54] and declare what shall constitute adulteration or when an article of food shall be deemed adulterated,[55] as by providing that the article shall be deemed adulterated if it contains any poisonous or deleterious substance which may render it injurious to health,[56] or contains any added substance or ingredient which is poisonous or injurious to the health,[57] or if any valuable or necessary constituent or ingredient has been wholly or in part abstracted from

(2) Milk used for manufacturing purposes is included in a statutory provision declaring that "milk includes fluid milk" generally, without expressing any limitation as to the purpose, whether for human consumption directly or for manufacturing, for which the fluid milk is to be used.—Rieck-McJunkin Dairy Co. v. Milk Control Commission, 18 A.2d 868, 341 Pa. 153.

"Economic relationship"

As used in a statutory provision relating to the fixing of minimum prices for fluid milk and fluid cream on a basis of the "economic relationship of the price of fluid milk for the marketing area involved to the price of manufacturing milk," the term "economic relationship" means that the price designated to be paid to producers by distributors for market milk shall be based on the relative costs incurred in producing and marketing fluid milk to the cost of producing and marketing manufacturing milk.—Jersey Maid Milk Products Co. v. Brock, 91 P.2d 577, 13 Cal.2d 620.

A "homogenized" mixture is a mixture of milk or cream, which has been run through a homogenizer, and to which has been added sugar, or some other form of flavoring, and which is used in the manufacture of ice cream. As used in an order, the word "homogenized" is to be defined in accordance with its general meaning in the trade.—M. H. Renken Dairy Co. v. Wickard, D.C.N.Y., 45 F. Supp. 332.

"Pooling" and "averaging" are words of common use and their significance is commonly known.—Savage v. Martin, 91 P.2d 273, 161 Or. 660.

The word "price," in provision of Milk Control Act authorizing director of agriculture to fix minimum price which producer may receive for his milk, was not used in technical sense, and meant any return received by producer from distributor in the marketing of the milk.—United Milk Producers of California v. Cecil, 118 P.2d 830, 47 Cal.App.2d 758.

Words "well advertised," within statute establishing differential in minimum milk price in favor of dealers not having "well advertised trade name," mean well known.—Borden's Farm Products Co. v. Baldwin, N.Y., 55 S.Ct. 187, 293 U.S. 194, 79 L.Ed. 281, reversing, D.C., 7 F.Supp. 352, and mandate granted 55 S.Ct. 239.

Restriction of territorial effect

A state pure food and drug act under which it is unlawful to manufacture or sell or offer for sale any article of food adulterated, etc., within the definition of the act should be restricted in effect to territory of the state.—Boylston v. Armour & Co., 12 S.E.2d 34, 196 S.C. 1.

Food in, or not in, sealed package

The statutory definition of an adulterated article of food is not limited to food in a sealed package.—Donaldson v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 199 S.E. 213, 186 Ga. 870, 128 A. L.R. 456, answers to certified questions conformed to 200 S.E. 498, 59 Ga.App. 79.

Air in bread

Statutory provision should be strictly construed on account of its penal character.—People v. Lefkoff, 263 N.Y.S. 297, 147 Misc. 70.

Inferiority

(1) As used in such a statutory definition, "inferiority" is a term of comparison, implying a standard, which is to be found in the usual quality of the thing which the product under question purports to be.—U. S. v. Nesbitt Fruit Products, C.C.A.La., 96 F.2d 972, affirming, D.C., U. S. v. 492 Cases, More or Less, of Orange Juice, Each Case Containing Two One-Gallon Jugs, 20 F.Supp. 520, rehearing denied, C.C.A., U. S. v. Nesbitt Fruit Products, 97 F.2d 1018.

(2) It means that an ingredient of food was, in the first instance, of low grade or quality.—U. S. v. 492 Cases, More or Less, of Orange Juice, Each Case Containing Two One-Gallon Jugs, D.C.La., 20 F.Supp. 520, affirmed, C.C.A., U. S. v. Nesbitt Fruit Products, 96 F.2d 972, rehearing denied 97 F.2d 1018.

(3) Where orange juice preparation was sold in interstate commerce to retailers to be diluted in customer's presence and sold over the counter as an iced drink, preparation and sale of diluted drink was not within the federal statute, because it was not shipped in interstate commerce, and inferiority of diluted drink to pure orange juice did not cause original preparation to be an adulterated product.—U. S. v. Nesbitt Fruit Products, C.C.A.La., 96 F.2d 972, affirming, D.C., U. S. v. 492 Cases, More or Less, of Orange Juice, Each Case Containing Two One-Gallon Jugs, 20 F.Supp. 520, rehearing denied, C.C.A., U. S. v. Nesbitt Fruit Products, 97 F.2d 1018.

Coloring

(1) The coloring of a compound which is the mere natural result of the combination of ingredients, and not of the addition of artificial coloring, is not within such a provision.—U. S. v. Weeks, D.C.N.Y., 225 F. 1017.

(2) Also, the use of annatto to color pot cheese is not within such a provision.—People v. Lefkoff, 263 N.Y.S. 297, 147 Misc. 70.

(3) Under a statute declaring that an article shall be deemed adulterated "if it is colored . . . whereby damage or inferiority is concealed, or if by any means it is made to appear better or of greater value than it really is," the use of coal-tar dye in vanilla extract, although harmless, constituted adulteration because it made the extract look stronger than it was.—People v. Hinshaw, 97 N.W. 758, 135 Mich. 378.

(4) However, the use of harmless coloring matter in lemon extract does not constitute adulteration, where there is no evidence that the color of lemon extract is indicative of its character or value.—People v. Jennings, 94 N.W. 216, 132 Mich. 662.

Inclusiveness of statute

(1) The federal statute to this effect is all inclusive and prevents the shipment in interstate commerce of any food which contains any decomposed matter.—U. S. v. Commercial Creamery Co., D.C.Wash., 43 F.Supp. 714.

(2) It includes adulteration by nature, although the ordinary use of the word "adulteration" implies an actual addition to the original substance, through human agency.—U. S. v. Sprague, D.C.N.Y., 208 F. 419.

The word "decomposed," as used in such a statute, means more than the beginning of decomposition; it means a state of decomposition.—A. O. Andersen & Co. v. U. S., C.C.A. Wash., 284 F. 542.

62. Ga.—Donaldson v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 200 S.E. 498, 59 Ga.App. 79, conforming to answers to certified questions 199 S.E. 213, 186 Ga. 870, 128 A.L.R. 456.

Provision construed

As used in a provision that no article shall be deemed adulterated within the meaning of the statute when it is intended for export to any foreign country, and is prepared or packed according to the specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser, and no substance is used in the preparation or packing which is in conflict with the laws of the foreign country to which the article is intended to be shipped, the words "prepared or packed" mean any condition or grade of merchandise, including any deteriorated state of goods, considering the class to which they belong.—U. Milk or milk products. Valid statutes or ordinances relating to the purity or quality of milk or milk products shipped in interstate commerce, or sold or intended to be sold, are given effect to the extent, and only to the extent, that, as properly construed, they are applicable. This is true of statutes or ordinances which prohibit the adulteration of milk [70] by the addition of a foreign substance;[71] are directed against "filled milk" or milk to which any fat or oil other than milk fat is added;[72] prescribe a standard of pure milk, as that it shall contain a certain per cent of butter fat, or a certain per cent of solids, or not more than a certain per cent of water or fluids, and provide that all milk falling below this standard shall be deemed to be adulterated;[73] prohibit the sale, or possession with intent to sell, as pure milk or otherwise than as skimmed milk, of milk from which the cream or any part thereof has been removed;[74] make an exception to a prohibition of the manufacture of cheese from milk from which any of the fat originally contained therein has been removed;[75] regulate the source of supply;[76] impose requirements as to pasteurization of milk;[77] or require the grading of milk and cream obtained from producers for any commercial use or purpose.[78] The dilution of milk with water is an adulteration;[79] but under statutes containing different provisions relating thereto, adulterated milk and skimmed milk are not necessarily the same;[80] and a statute relating to the adulteration of food generally does not apply to milk which is excepted therefrom as being specially provided for by other legislation.[81] Pure milk, as it is given by the cows, is not within a statute merely prohibiting the adulteration or dilution of milk,[82] even though it falls below the standard required by sanitary regulations;[83] but, when it is below the standard, it is within a statute declaring that milk shall be deemed adulterated when it is below a prescribed standard.[84]

§ 16. Unwholesomeness or Unfitness for Use

Statutes and ordinances intended to prevent the manufacture or sale of food or food products that are unwholesome or unfit for human consumption will be enforced in accordance with their proper construction.

Valid statutes or ordinances, especially directed at the prevention of the sale for food of articles that are unwholesome [85] or not fit for human consumption,[86] either by reason of the nature of their composition or ingredients,[87] or of their being the products of diseased animals,[88] or by reason of their decay,[89] or because of immaturity or unripeness,[90] will or will not be enforced and given effect accordingly as, when properly construed, they are or are not applicable. The statutes are not intended to regulate tastes or appetites,[91] and the courts will not deem an article of food unwholesome merely because it is unpalatable to many, or even most, persons.[92] Furthermore, an article of food is not unwholesome, within the meaning of such a statute, merely because it is unwholesome to a particular individual or to normal persons under abnormal conditions; it must have such qualities that normal persons generally, in a normal condition, would be adversely affected by its consumption.[93] It has been said that the condition of a product in the hands of a consumer is the place and time to test its fitness for food;[94] and that the practice of a shipper of keeping bottled spring water in storage for such a length of time as would leave no doubt of its wholesomeness before it was put on the market, would not clear him of the charge of shipping unwholesome water if it was unwholesome at the time of shipment.[95] Whether unfit or unwholesome articles are within statutes relating to adulteration see supra § 15.

§ 17. Substitutes or Imitations

Statutes relating to articles of food which are imitations of, or substitutes for, other articles of food, when applicable, as properly construed, will be accorded effect.

Valid statutes forbidding the manufacture or sale of any article of food which is an imitation of, or is sold under the name of, another article,[96] or which is branded or labeled falsely,[97] or in a manner naturally to mislead the purchaser into a belief that it is something it is not,[98] are given effect when, and only when, as properly construed, they are applicable; and the same is true of an exception, in such a statute, of such food mixtures or compounds as are commonly known by their own distinctive names.[99] It is not essential to the application of such statutes that the imitating article or substance be harmful or deleterious;[1] but, as noted infra § 23, many statutes of this nature are held not to be violated by the manufacture or sale of a wholesome or harmless substitute or imitation where the purchaser or consumer is given notice

Use of materials or ingredients

§ 18. —— Oleomargarine and Other Imitations of Dairy Products

Statutes relating to oleomargarine and other imitations of, or substitutes for, butter will be given effect according to their terms and the proper construction thereof.

Statutes relating to oleomargarine and other imitations of, or substitutes for, butter will be applied in,[2] and only in,[3] proper cases. They have been construed [4] and generally are considered not to prohibit absolutely the manufacture and sale of the products,[5] but merely to regulate their manufacture and sale in such a manner as to prevent their being sold for genuine butter.[6] Statutes directed against the sale or manufacture of colored oleomargarine have been construed;[7] and while some of them have been construed not to forbid the sale or manufacture of oleomargarine which has been given a yellow color, not by means of artificial coloring matter, but by the use of ingredients naturally producing a yellowish color,[8] others have been construed as forbidding the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine or imitation butter of the color of yellow butter, regardless of whether the color is produced by the use of coloring matter or the use of ingredients which naturally produce the color of yellow butter.[9]

§ 19. —— Imitations of Lard and the Like

If, as properly construed, they are applicable, effect will be given statutes regulating the manufacture and sale of substitutes for lard.

Statutory regulations of the manufacture and sale of cottolene and other substitutes for lard and the like will be construed and, if applicable accorded effect.[10]

§ 20. —— Imitations of Vinegar

Valid regulations directed against imitations of vinegar are given effect, provided, as properly construed, they are applicable.

When, as properly construed, they are applicable, but not otherwise, effect will be given to valid statutes or other regulations establishing a standard or test for vinegar,[11] and prohibiting the manufacture or sale of any adulterated[12] or artificially colored [13] vinegar, or any vinegar or product in imitation of cider vinegar which is not cider vinegar,[14] or prohibiting the misbranding of such substitutes or adulterated products so as to mislead the public.[15]

III. VIOLATIONS OF REGULATIONS

The guilt of a person accused of violation of a food regulation depends upon whether his acts are inhibited by the terms of the regulation.

sonably and properly construed,[17] and whether intent and guilty knowledge, on his part, are shown, where these constitute essential ingredients of the offense, see infra § 22. The violation of rules or regulations prescribed by executive officers does not constitute an offense where such regulations are not authorized by statute or are not given the force and authority of law;[18] and violations of such regulations, which are not in themselves violations of any legislative act or of the common law, are not criminal, in the absence of a previous legislative act prescribing a punishment therefor, and neither forfeitures, fines, nor penalties may be prescribed, imposed, or inflicted therefor, either by executive officers, or by courts.[19]

§ 22. Knowledge and Intent

Neither intent nor guilty knowledge is an essential element of the offenses created by most food statutes and ordinances, especially the more recently enacted legislation.

While there are, or at times have been, food statutes or ordinances under which the intent of accused is an essential element,[20] as a general rule, especially under the more recently enacted legislation, a specific criminal intent is not essential to sustain a conviction for the violation of a food statute or ordinance.[21] Thus such an intent is not an essential element of such offenses as selling food that is adulterated [22] or below the legal standard,[23] or the sale of which is otherwise forbidden by law,[24] or shipping adulterated or misbranded articles of food in interstate commerce,[25] or of the offense of over reading or under reading or in any other manner making an untrue test of butter or cream.[26] Intent is not an essential element of the offense of wrongfully selling oleomargarine under the name of, and under the pretense that the same is, butter, under some statutes,[27] but under others it is.[28] So, also, under some,[29] but not other,[30] statutes or ordinances, intent is an essential element of the offense of keeping, possessing, or exposing or offering for sale, certain articles of food, such as adulterated or unwholesome articles.

Guilty knowledge. In earlier times, dealing in unwholesome food was treated to a large extent like other crimes, and proof of guilty knowledge was essential to a conviction.[31] However, where the statute makes knowledge of the unwholesomeness or adulteration of the food an essential ingredient of the offense, it is necessary that such knowledge should appear;[32] but, as a general rule, under the statutes, such knowledge is not an essential element and need not be shown.[33] Where the offense is purely statutory, the question of whether a conviction may properly be had without proof of knowledge is one of statutory construction and not one for the application of a common-law rule.[34] At any rate, where there is knowledge, coupled with the doing of the forbidden act, the transaction is within the operation of the statute.[35]

§ 23. Notice to Purchasers or Public

The gravamen of the offenses created by some food statutes is the failure to give notice, either generally or in a prescribed mode, to the public or to purchasers or consumers, of the true character or condition of the article of food sold or furnished, and, under other statutes, it is the making of false or misleading statements in a brand or label.

Notice to the purchaser will not exempt the seller from liability under a statute wholly prohibiting the sale of the article in question;[36] but under other statutes the failure of the person selling or furnishing the food in question to make its unwholesome condition known to the buyer,[37] or to inform the purchaser or consumer of the fact that it is an imitation or substitute,[38] or to indicate by the display of proper and specific signs that both kosher and nonkosher meats are sold or displayed,[39] is an essential element, and indeed the gravamen, of the offense denounced. Frequently, the manufacture or sale of wholesome or harmless imitations or substitutes,[40] and sometimes the sale of food products which are of an inferior quality,[41] are deemed permissible, and not violative of statutory provisions, where, by color, label, or otherwise, the purchaser or consumer, or the public, is given notice of the true and exact nature of the articles. Nevertheless, a statute requiring notice to be given in a particular mode is violated by failure to comply therewith,[42] even though notice is given in some other way, as where the statute requires posted notices and information is given by bills of fare,[43] or the statute requires a brand or label indicating the nature of the product and information is conveyed by oral notice.[44] Likewise, where a statutory prohibition is limited to coloring in imitation of the genuine color of another substance, such a coloring is a violation of the statute, even though the product is truthfully labeled.[45]

Various matters have been held not to be a misbranding or other violation of statutes relating to

§ 24. Illegal Manufacture

A statute prohibiting the manufacture of a food product is not violated unless there is an act or acts within its terms and unless there is also a certain intent, if such intent is made an element of the offense. Negligence in fact is not a material element of the offense.

Where the statute provides against the manufacture of compounds in imitation of well-known articles of food, the gist of the offense consists in the imitation.[51] However, the statutory prohibition is aimed at a designed and intentional imitation[52] and not at a mere resemblance of qualities inherent in the articles themselves and common to both.[53] It is not usually unlawful for a person to manufacture wholesome substances and sell them for what they are;[54] and in order to convict it must be established that he intended to sell such substances for another product.[55]

A statute applicable only to the complete manufacture of ice cream is not violated by the mere freezing of a mixture of ingredients prepared by, and purchased from, another person.[56]

Negligence in fact is not a material element of a statutory offense of manufacturing an article of food containing a deleterious ingredient which may render the food injurious to health.[57]

§ 25. Illegal Sale

A sale of a food product in violation of a penal statute or ordinance is punishable.

Provided there is a violation of a penal statute or ordinance, it is an offense to make a sale of a certain food product,[58] such as a food product that is adulterated,[59] diseased,[60] or is below the standard fixed by law,[61] or is so prepared as to work a fraud on the public;[62] and a like rule obtains as to a particular kind of sale of a food product, such as a sale by short weight[63] or a sale of milk at a price less than that fixed by a milk control board.[64] The foregoing is true in respect of a sale for food purposes;[65] and, since the entire object of the statutes prohibiting the sale of unwholesome and adulterated food stuffs is to preserve the public health and to prevent fraud and imposition, see supra § 3, it must generally appear that the article was sold as food,[66] or at least in the ordinary course of trade.[67] A sale of adulterated food for the purpose of analysis on demand made for that purpose by the proper officer is, therefore, not a violation of the statutes against sale,[68] but is such violation, if the sample is sold in the ordinary course of trade, although it is obtained by the purchaser for analysis.[69]

Where an article, the sale of which is prohibited, is sold in one state for delivery in another, the transaction constitutes a violation of the law of the state where the sale is made,[70] but not of the law of the state of delivery.[71] So, for the purpose of determining the application of statutes relating to sales, the sending by a purchaser in one place of an order to the seller in another place, where it is accepted, constitutes a sale where it is accepted,[72] but not at the place from which it is sent.[73]

§ 26. Having Possession or Exposing for Sale

Statutes or ordinances making it an offense to have possession of or expose certain articles of food for sale have been violated in some, but not other, cases.

In a particular case there may be a violation of a statute or ordinance making it an offense to hold, keep, have possession of, or expose certain articles of food "for sale"[74] or "with intent to sell."[75] The possession coupled with the intent constitutes the offense, where intent is an element thereof;[76] but, as noted supra § 22, intent is not an element under some statutes or ordinances. One cannot be held to be keeping a forbidden commodity for the purpose of sale, unless he has authority to make a contract of sale.[77] Furthermore, where a contract of sale is entered into in one state for the delivery of oleomargarine in another state, the goods being separated from the general stock and actually delivered to the purchaser, the seller is not guilty of keeping oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter on hand for sale in the latter state, since such goods were already delivered when they reached such state.[78]

§ 27. Furnishing

A violation of a statute may consist of furnishing adulterated or unwholesome food for use.

Since the statutes in regard to adulterated or unwholesome food are intended primarily to prevent its use, they are usually so worded and construed as to prohibit furnishing it, or in any manner causing it, to be used.[79]

§ 28. Storage

Statutes and ordinances relating to the cold storage of food vary somewhat in their requirements and prohibitions, and consequently there is a variance as to what constitutes a violation thereof.

There should be no violation of applicable statutes requiring all food received in cold storage to be reported to a designated officer[80] or prohibiting the holding of fresh fish in cold storage for a longer period than one year without the consent of designated state officers.[81] However, a particular storage act is not per se violated by the mere storage of food longer than a stated time, but only when food held in storage longer than that time is sold or offered or exposed for sale.[82] Also, as properly construed, an ordinance requiring meat and fish to be kept in a refrigerator or cooling room, at all times other than during the usual business hours is not violated by keeping meat and fish in refrigerator display cases where they are preserved as well as, or better than, in a cooling room.[83]

§ 29. Injunction to Prevent Violation

An injunction against further violations of food or milk control statutes may be granted under statutory authority.

Under statutory authority, further violations of certain food or milk control statutes may be enjoined.[84] The injunction granted should not be so broad as to cover an act not prohibited by statute.[85]

The proceedings before a milk control board or commission will not be opened in the suit for an injunction;[86] and sometimes the court refuses an injunction in view of the annulment by the board or commission of its order in a related matter.[87]

IV. PENALTIES AND ACTIONS THEREFOR

§ 30. In General

Civil liability, and a civil action to recover a penalty, for violation of a food regulation are contemplated by some statutes which are within the competency of a state legislature to enact.

A number of statutes relating to penalties for violations of food regulations and actions for the recovery thereof have been enacted by state legislatures and considered by the courts.[88]

It is competent for the legislature to impose a civil, as well as a criminal, liability for a breach or violation of a food regulation.[89] So, also, the legislature may, without altering or impairing the criminal liability, provide that in certain cases the additional civil liability shall not be enforced.[90] Some statutes do not contemplate both a prosecution and an action in debt for the same offense and, while allowing either, do not permit both.[91]

An action in debt for the recovery of a fine or penalty for violation of a food regulation is a civil action,[92] and the rules of criminal procedure are not applicable thereto.[93] If the statute limits the time for bringing the action, it must be brought within that time.[94] The power of amendment vested in the court by statute may be sufficiently comprehensive to enable the court to amend the summons in respect of the amount of the penalty so as to make it conform to statutory provisions.[95]

§ 31. Number and Amount of Penalties

Although statutory provisions control the maximum number and amount of penalties recoverable, the maximum penalty provided by statute should not be imposed where there was no intent to violate the law.

The number and amount of the penalties recoverable depend on the terms of the several statutes,[96] and a cumulative recovery will be allowed where it appears that such was the intent of the legislature.[97] Where one violating a food law is entirely innocent of any intent so to do, the maximum penalty provided by the statute should not be imposed.[98]

§ 32. Who May Sue

According to the usual statutory requirement, an action for a penalty should be brought by a designated officer in the name of the people or the state.

Under a statute so providing, the action for a penalty must be brought in the name of the people or state, at the suit of a designated officer[99] or with his advice and consent.[1] An action for a penalty, under a statute for the protection of butter and cheese manufacturers against the sale to them of diluted milk, must be brought in the name of the party injured and defrauded by the sale of such milk and not in the name of such a manufacturer unless he has been so defrauded.[2]

§ 33. Persons Liable

A person may be liable for a penalty by reason of his personal violation of a food law or because of his responsibility for acts done by his agent, employee, or partner.

A wholesaler or commission merchant, as well as a retailer, may be liable for a penalty.[3] The principal is liable for a penalty where a violation of a food law is committed by an employee or agent acting within the general scope of his authority.[4] Where an unlawful sale is made by one member of a partnership, in the course of the partnership business, the partners are jointly liable for the penalty provided by statute.[5]

§ 34. Defenses

Matters to be defenses to an action to recover a penalty for violation of a food regulation must be such as show that the regulation has not been violated.

The failure of the proper officer to perform an act which by the statute is made a condition precedent to the imposition of the penalty is a good defense.[6] Also, the fact that the product in question was manufactured or in process of manufacture at the time of the passage of the act, imposing the penalty, so as to be exempt from the operation thereof by its express terms is a matter of defense.[7]

On the other hand, it is no defense to an action for a penalty for selling an article of food of a quality condemned by law that defendant did not produce the condition complained of,[8] or that the quality of the article sold was impaired with the consent of the agent of the purchaser who is also the nominal plaintiff in the action,[9] or that a public officer attempted to abrogate the provisions of the statute,[10] or that the sale was made in accordance with a trade usage or custom repugnant to the express provisions of the statute.[11] Also, in an action for a penalty for selling milk diluted with water, it is no defense that defendant, before offering it for sale, told the buyer and the inspector, who was about to make a test, that a certain quantity of pure water had been accidentally spilled into the milk;[12] and in an action to recover a penalty for possession and use, without the consent of the owner, of milk cans marked with the name of the owner, it is no defense that defendant procured the cans from a public dump.[13] In an action to recover a penalty for the sale of an adulterated article, in violation of a state law, a defense, based on the fact that the article was imported and the provision of the federal constitution giving congress power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, is unavailing where defendant does not establish a sale in the original package of a legitimate article of commerce.[14]

§ 35. Jurisdiction and Venue

Statutory provisions are determinative of the jurisdiction of particular courts of actions for penalties for violations of food regulations.

The question as to what courts have jurisdiction of actions for penalties for violations of the pure food laws is dependent on the terms of the several statutes.[15]

§ 36. Pleading

A complaint complying with local requirements and alleging facts showing a violation of the statute under which a recovery of the penalty is sought is sufficient; and evidence in support thereof is admissible. The allowance of an amendment is within the power and discretion of the court.

Where a civil action and a criminal prosecution are alternative, but not conjunctive, remedies for violation of a food regulation, it is no excuse for failure to file an affidavit of merits that, by such affidavit, defendant might incriminate himself.[16] Under a particular statute, no pleadings, except a sworn complaint, are necessary.[17]

The complaint must allege facts sufficient to show a violation of the statute under which a recovery of the penalty is sought;[18] but, if such facts are alleged with reasonable precision, it will be sufficient.[19] Evidentiary matter need not be alleged;[20] and it is not necessary to negative statutory exceptions or provisos[21] having no relation to the facts alleged in the complaint.[22]

In compliance with the local practice it has been held that separate causes of action should be set out in separate counts, numbered as such.[23] A sale of several packages of adulterated food at one time and place to one person as a single transaction should be alleged in the complaint as one cause of action,[24] even though the statute provides that the sale of each one of the several packages shall constitute a separate violation and the seller may be liable thereunder for a separate penalty for each package sold.[25]

Amendment. The court has statutory power to amend the pleadings to conform to the statute in respect of the amount of the penalty.[26] The granting of leave to serve an amended complaint, as well as the imposition of costs as a condition, is within the sound discretion of the court,[27] and the court is not bound to deny such leave on the ground of laches, where a large part of the delay is chargeable to defendant.[28]

Evidence admissible under pleadings. Under a complaint alleging a sale by defendant in violation of law, evidence of a sale by his agent or servant is admissible;[29] and evidence of the analysis of a sample is admissible, although the complaint does not set out in full the manner in which the sample was obtained.[30]

What must be proved. Where it is alleged that an article of food is manufactured in imitation of another article, the evidence must show a standard by which a comparison may be made.[31] Matters appearing in the definitions of terms need not be shown by testimony.[32]

§ 37. Evidence

Except to the extent that they are affected by statute, the rules of evidence obtaining in civil actions generally are applicable in a civil action to recover a penalty for violation of a food regulation.

The burden of proof is on plaintiff to show all facts necessary to establish a violation of the statute under which the action is brought;[33] and the burden rests on defendant to bring himself within an exception.[34]

Judicial notice will be taken that glucose enters into many different articles of food and is not used by itself as such.[35]

Admissibility. Except to the extent that evidence of a particular kind may be required by statute,[36] any material and ordinarily competent evidence which tends to sustain[37] or to rebut[38] any essential allegation of the complaint is admissible.

Weight and sufficiency. The evidence in particular cases has been held sufficient[39] and in other cases insufficient.[40] Where proof of adulteration or failure to comply with a standard fixed by law is sought to be made by evidence of the analysis of a sample of the article, and a statute prescribes the manner in which the sample must be taken, or in which the analysis must be made, the evidence will be insufficient if it fails to show compliance with such requirements,[41] and, on the other hand, it will be sufficient if it shows compliance with the requirements[42] and the fairness of the samples or of the analysis is not impugned.[43] However, where no particular manner is prescribed in which the sample must be taken or the analysis made, it is not necessary to show that such acts were performed in any particular manner.[44]

§ 38. Trial and Judgment

A trial or hearing and the submission of questions of fact to a jury or the making of proper findings of fact by the court are prerequisite to the rendition of a judgment for a penalty.

On a trial before a jury, questions of fact should be submitted to it[45] with proper instructions.[46] Where the trial is before the court without a jury, as it is under some statutes,[47] a judgment for a penalty should be rendered when,[48] and only when,[49] findings showing a violation of law by defendant have been made. Even though defendant has defaulted, it is not permissible for the court to fix the amount of the fine or penalty without a hearing.[50]

V. CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS

§ 39. In General

Selling unwholesome provisions for use as human food was an indictable offense at common law; today, violations of pure food laws generally constitute criminal offenses.

Selling unwholesome provisions for use as human food was an indictable offense at common law;[51] and it has been held that furnishing such provisions in any manner, or causing such unwholesome matter to be used, likewise constitutes a common-law offense.[52] Today, in most if not all jurisdictions, there are statutes regulating the manufacture, sale, and use of food products, see supra §§ 3–20, and violations of such regulations generally constitute criminal offenses.[53] While some particular officer or department is usually charged by statute with the prosecution of offenders against and with the enforcement of the pure food laws,[54] yet the enforcement of such laws is not ordinarily dependent on action by such officer or department,[55] and prosecutions may be instituted on complaint of other officers[56] or of private individuals,[57] unless the statute does not permit any private prosecution.[58] Under some statutes, the department or officer authorized to prosecute offenders has considerable discretion in determining whether to prosecute or to give an opportunity to rectify mistakes.[59] In any prosecution for violation of a food law, the court has the double duty of protecting the public against misbranded or adulterated foods, and, at the same time, of protecting merchants against improper prosecution.[60]

§ 40. Defenses

Whether or not a particular fact constitutes a defense to a prosecution for violation of a pure food law depends on the provisions of the statute. Under the federal Pure Food and Drugs Act and similar state statutes, a guaranty by the seller from whom defendant purchased the articles to the effect that they are not adulterated or misbranded is a defense to a prosecution of the dealer if it conforms to the statutory requirements.

Whether or not a particular fact constitutes a defense to a prosecution for violation of a pure food law depends on the provisions of the statute. Thus, on a prosecution for selling the meat of an animal that has died otherwise than by slaughter, it is no defense that the meat was wholesome.[61] So, too, a custom of the trade to label packages so as to state approximately the quantity in liquid or solid measure, nearest the general size of the package, is not a defense to the violation of a statute against misbranding.[62] On a prosecution for the violation of an ordinance prohibiting the fraudulent sale of diseased, spoiled, or unwholesome meat, the fact that the purchaser selected the meat and thought at the time it was good is not a defense.[63] The attempt on the part of an officer charged with the enforcement of the pure food laws to abrogate the plain provisions of such laws is no defense to a criminal prosecution for their violation.[64]

Guilty knowledge or intent as essential to constitute a violation of a pure food law is considered supra § 22.

Warranty or guaranty of vendor. Under the federal Pure Food and Drugs Act and similar state statutes, a guaranty by the seller from whom defendant purchased the articles to the effect that they are not adulterated or misbranded is a defense to a prosecution of a dealer under the act.[65] If the statute so provides, the guaranty, to afford protection, must be given by a seller resident within the United States, and must bear the signature, name, and address of the seller who is himself liable to the penalties prescribed by the act if the articles sold are adulterated or misbranded,[66] but the statute may dispense with a particular requirement, as, for example, the requirement that the guaranty be signed by the seller.[67] The guaranty must relate to the identical article sold, and is not sufficient if it merely covers a constituent of the article transported or sold in violation of the act.[68] Such a provision does not exempt dealers from liability for placing in such articles substances "poisonous or injurious to health in any quantity for any purpose whatever."[69]

As a general rule a principal may be convicted on proof of a prohibited sale by his employee or agent in the course of his employment; but an employee is generally not liable to prosecution for merely clerical acts in accordance with instructions, unless his acts come within the definition of the offense.

Under the statutes prohibiting certain sales in general terms or prohibiting certain sales either in person or through another, a principal may be convicted on proof of such a sale by his employee or agent acting in the general course of his employment,[70] and the employee is liable if his own acts come within the definition of the offense.[71] Officers and stockholders in a corporation are not liable as such for a violation of the pure food laws by the manager of the corporation, but, to the extent that they confer on the manager the authority to do the acts which are performed by him in violation of law, they are liable.[72] An employee, who merely delivers an article of food under orders from his employer, is not liable to conviction, although such article is not protected from contamination as required by law.[73] A clerk of a dealer who merely receives an order, and, on its being accepted by his employer, selects and ships out the goods, does not violate a statute against the sale of adulterated food.[74] An agent who, in good faith, takes an order for pure food stuffs does not violate a pure food law if his principal fills the order with adulterated goods[75] without the knowledge of the agent and without an opportunity on his part to examine such goods.[76] A salesman who takes an order for an article of food in one state, subject to acceptance or rejection by the manufacturer in another state, which sale is accepted, by the shipment of an article which is adulterated within the meaning of the statute of the state where the order is taken, is not guilty of selling an adulterated article in that state or of aiding or abetting in such sale.[77] Where, however, one takes an order for a food product and receives payment for it and such product is delivered to him by the manufacturer, who resides in another state, and it is delivered by him to the purchaser, he is guilty, if a violation of the food law of the state where the order is taken results from such transaction.[78]

§ 42. Preliminary Proceedings

Where a provision for preliminary notice to the accused and an opportunity for hearing is merely administrative or directory, such notice and opportunity are not prerequisite to a prosecution; and the same is true of a provision for the delivery of the result of an analysis to the person from whom the sample was taken.

Under the federal Pure Food and Drugs Act the secretary of agriculture, after an investigation of the alleged violation of the law, is required to certify at once the fact to the United States district

Possibility that dealer added matter

In prosecution for adulteration of meat, defense that preservative used was guaranteed under the national Pure Food and Drugs Act was held unavailable, despite statute exempting dealers who rely on such guaranty, where the meat sold actually contained a deleterious substance that might have been added by defendant.—Turner v. Reason for rule

"The duty placed upon the dealer in foods is absolute within the limits of his control. . . . If he has such [adulterated] food in his stock of goods, whether he knows its condition or not, and has a clerk authorized to make sales from such stock, then any sale made therefrom by such clerk is a sale by the employer, because they are the employer's goods, sold through his agent."—State v. attorney in whose district the prosecution should be brought,[79] who must, on receiving such certificate, institute a prosecution.[80] A provision in this statute for preliminary notice of a finding of a violation and an opportunity for a hearing before complaint is made has been held merely administrative or directory, and failure to give such notice and opportunity does not bar a prosecution;[81] and the same has been held true with respect to a similar provision of a state pure food law.[82] The delivery of the result of the analysis of a sample of milk to the person from whom the sample was taken or to the person responsible for the condition of the milk, as required by a pure food statute, has been held not a prerequisite to a prosecution for having possession of milk below the prescribed standard.[83] A statute providing for written notice to a milk producer requiring him to make the milk conform to standard as a condition precedent to prosecution for selling milk below standard is not applicable to a prosecution under another statute for removing cream from milk.[84]

§ 43. Process

Under appropriate statutory provisions, accused persons may be brought before the court by summons or capias, and witnesses by subpoenas, properly issued.

Under appropriate statutory provisions, persons accused of violating food laws may be brought before the court by a summons or capias, but such process should not be issued before facts showing the existence of probable cause have been presented to the judge.[85] Subpœnas for witnesses should be issued in the ordinary form and in the customary way.[86]

§ 44. Indictment, Information, or Complaint

The sufficiency of the allegations of the indictment, information, or complaint is generally determined by whether or not they sufficiently identify the offense charged and state all the facts necessary to constitute the offense.

Prosecutions for the violation of food laws are begun by an indictment,[87] an information,[88] or a complaint in the nature of an indictment.[89] The form and sufficiency of allegations are dependent on the terms of the statute and the exact nature of the offense charged;[90] and, in general, the allegations will be held sufficient[91] or insufficient,[92] in accordance with whether or not they sufficiently identify the offense charged, and state all the facts necessary to constitute it. No particular form of words is necessary;[93] but an indictment which substantially follows the language of the statute is usually sufficient.[94]

In accordance with these principles, an indict-

One additional word

Under an act relating to pure foodstuff an information naming cotton seed cake described therein as "concentrated commercial feeding stuff," ment or equivalent pleading for selling an adulterated article is sufficient in general if it alleges that defendant has sold an impure article and sets out the facts which show the adulteration, with appropriate averments as to time, place, person, and other circumstances identifying the particular transaction.[95] In a prosecution for knowingly having in possession an adulterated article with intent to sell it, a specification of the person by whom the adulterating was done is unnecessary.[96] Misrepresentation or concealment of the nature of the article, where this is the gist of the offense, should be charged.[97]

Matters of defense, which can be shown under a plea of not guilty, need not be anticipated and negatived.[98] Thus, a proviso or exception in the statute, not descriptive of the offense, is a matter of defense, and need not be negatived.[99]

§ 45. —— Particular Allegations

The necessity and sufficiency of allegations of particular facts depend on the terms of the statute defining the offense charged.

Description of accused. Where the statute makes punishable a certain class of persons, such as manufacturers or dealers in a particular article, the indictment should allege that defendant belonged to the class specified, as that he was a manufacturer or dealer.[1]

Description of purchaser. The name of the person or persons to whom the food was sold, if such person or persons are known, should usually be alleged,[2] but this is not always necessary.[3] Where the names of the purchasers are unknown, it is both proper and sufficient to allege that the sales were made by persons to the jurors unknown.[4] It has been held, however, that such an allegation is not authorized unless a careful investigation has been made to learn the names of the purchasers.[5] Where, under the statute, possession and exposure for sale of the adulterated article constitutes the offense, it is not necessary to allege the name of the purchaser.[6]

Description of article or product. The indictment should contain a description of the article sufficient to show that it was within the class of articles the handling of which in the stated manner is forbidden by law,[7] as that it was unwholesome[8] or adulterated,[9] and, in alleging misbranding, should state not only the brands used but also wherein they were illegal or improper;[10] but an information chargwhen the statute omits the word "commercial," is sufficient.—Guild v. State, 187 S.W. 215, 79 Tex.Cr. 603.

Composite language of two statutes

Complaint and information charging egg dealer with selling and exposing for sale eggs unfit for human consumption, which adopted composite language of Pure Food and Drugs Act and of the Egg Law were sufficient to charge an offense under provision of the Pure Food and Drugs Act relating to sale of adulterated food.—Ferch v. People, 74 P.2d 712, 101 Colo. 471.

If the language of one section of the statute does not include all the facts necessary to constitute the offense, an indictment following that one section alone and omitting other essential facts is insufficient.—State v. Shortell, 156 S.W. 988, 174 Mo.App. 153.

Allegations held sufficient

(1) The restriction of the application of the statute to original unbroken packages applies only to those who receive in interstate commerce and thereafter deliver adulterated or misbranded articles, not to those who ship or deliver for shipment, so that an information charging that defendant shipped misbranded food in interstate commerce need not allege that it was shipped in original unbroken packages.—U. S. v. Krumm, D.C.Pa., 269 F. 848.

(2) A complaint, charging that accused unlawfully offered for sale one firkin containing forty pounds of lard, twenty pounds of butter, and one bowl containing two pounds of lard, which food was then and there adulterated in that it was not protected from contamination and was exposed to unclean and unsanitary conditions, was held sufficient as against demurrer that it was the firkin and bowl, and not the contents, that accused was charged with offering for sale.—State v. Long, 117 A. 303, 121 Me. 365.

Shipping adulterated food

Information charging defendant with shipping food "adulterated" by substitution of product containing less than eighty per centum by weight of milk fat for "butter" was held not demurrable.—U. S. v. Centralia Dairy Co., D.C.Wash., 60 F.2d 141.

10. U.S.—Nave-McCord Mercantile

ing defendant with having possession of adulterated food with intent to sell it need not allege that a certain substance with which it was alleged to be adulterated was either poisonous or injurious to health, or that the article in question violated a standard of purity established by the board of health.[11] It is not necessary that it should deny that it is a mixture or compound within a proviso of the statute by which mixtures or compounds recognized as articles of food not injurious to health are excepted from its operation.[12] An indictment charging defendant with selling a butter substitute not properly branded need not specifically describe the substitute;[13] and an information under a statute making unlawful the sale of filled milk containing oil other than milk fat in imitation or semblance of real milk need not charge in what way the product was in semblance or imitation.[14] A complaint for the violation of an ordinance providing for the protection of meats and other foods from filth and contamination need not designate the kind of meat which defendant is accused of having exposed for sale.[15] Where the gist of the offense, under the statute, is the addition of matter to conceal the inferiority of the article sold, actual inferiority should be alleged.[16] Where the statute makes the addition of poisonous or injurious ingredients essential to constitute the offense, an affidavit on which to base a criminal prosecution is insufficient if it fails to allege the addition of such substance.[17] A specification of the particular adulterant used is not generally necessary,[18] although in some instances it is required;[19] and the quantity used need not ordinarily be alleged.[20]

Intent or guilty knowledge. Wherever, under the rules considered supra § 22, the intention of accused is necessary to constitute the offense, such intent must be alleged in every material part of the indictment,[21] but otherwise such an allegation is not necessary.[22] So, too, it is not necessary to allege guilty knowledge on the part of defendant, where the mere fact of possession or sale is an offense;[23] but, where guilty knowledge is one of the elements of the offense, see supra § 22, there must be not only an allegation of such knowledge,[24] but such allegation must cover each element of the offense mentioned in the statute.[25]

Intent to sell for food. That the article in question was sold as an article of food must be alleged in an indictment under a statute prohibiting a sale of such article as food,[26] and, where the statute

"Flavor" not "extract"

Allegation of misbranding because a liquid labeled "Flavor of Vanilla" did not contain any extract of vanilla is insufficient, the words "extract" and "flavor" not being synonymous. —U. S. v. St. Louis Coffee & Spice Mills, D.C.Mo., 189 F. 191.

Allegations held sufficient

(1) Information charging article containing less than eighty per centum by weight of milk fat was "misbranded," in that statements "butter" and "one pound net" on packages were false and misleading, was held not demurrable.—U. S. v. Centralia Dairy Co., D.C.Wash., 60 F.2d 141.

(2) An information, alleging that statements of label were false and misleading, in that they represented to the purchaser that the article was a substitute for eggs and could be used in place of eggs for cooking and baking, whereas, in truth, such article was not then and there a substitute for eggs, and could not be used in place of eggs for baking and cooking, was sufficient, as against an objection that it did not set forth why or in what manner the article could not be used as a substitute for eggs.—U. S. v. Newton Tea & Spice Co., D.C.Ohio, 275 F. 394.

Allegations held insufficient

Since "macaroni" is defined as made from a paste from the flour of hard glutinous wheat, and "semolina" is defined as the hard grains retained in the bolting machine after the fine flour has passed through, an indictment charging interstate shipment of an article labeled "macaroni," which was adulterated and misbranded because made of flour, not of semolina, is not sufficiently definite, even though macaroni must not contain the fine flour which passes through the bolting machine.—U. S. v. Krumm, D.C.Pa., 269 F. 848.

prohibits the possession of certain articles or products with intent to sell them as food, the information or indictment must allege that the intent was so to sell them;[27] but under other statutes prohibiting the sale of articles in general terms, without regard to the purpose for which they are to be used, it is not necessary to allege that they were sold as food.[28]

Intent to injure health. An indictment for selling unwholesome food, as good and wholesome food, need not allege that defendant intended to injure the health of any person or persons or that it did injure their health.[29]

§ 46. —— Issues, Proof, and Variance

All material allegations of the indictment must be proved as laid, but an immaterial variance will be disregarded. Averments constituting surplusage need not be proved.

As in other criminal prosecutions, in a prosecution for violation of a food law all the material allegations of the indictment must be proved as laid,[30] but an immaterial variance will be disregarded.[31] Averments in the complaint constituting surplusage need not be proved.[32]

In accordance with these principles it has been held that an indictment charging defendant personally with selling a prohibited article is sustained by proof that the sale was made by an employee of defendant under his authority;[33] and a complaint alleging possession of an adulterated article contrary to statute, by defendant, is supported by evidence of possession by defendant's servant in the course of his employment.[34] An information charging a sale to a certain person is sustained by evidence that the person named purchased the article as agent for another;[35] and an averment of having possession for sale is sustained by proof of a consummated sale.[36] Under an indictment charging that to an article sold by defendant had been added a certain foreign substance, a further description whereof is unknown to complainant, evidence as to what the foreign substance was or consisted of is not inadmissible as a variance.[37] In a prosecution for possession of meat of several calves less than four weeks old with intent to sell, the state was not required to show that all of the calves slaughtered were under four weeks of age.[38] The fact that an information for selling misbranded feed stuff alleged that defendant was the agent of a corporation and that the proof showed that the concern was a partnership does not constitute a fatal variance;[39] but it has been held under a statute forbidding the sale of any adulterated article of food or drugs that an allegation of the sale of a prohibited article as a drug is not sustained by proof of its sale as food.[40] Averments as to the nature of the article adulterated must be sustained by the evidence as to all important particulars.[41] It has been held, however, that proof of adulteration of cream is sufficient to sustain an averment of adulteration of milk.[42] A conviction of one offense against the food laws cannot be upheld on proof of commission of another distinct offense, the commission of which is not charged.[43]

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

The state has the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt every element necessary to constitute the offense; but certain elements, such as intent or guilty knowledge, may be presumed from proved facts, unless rebutted. Defendant must prove affirmative defenses.

The burden of proof is on the state to establish[44] beyond a reasonable doubt[45] every element necessary to constitute the offense; and defendant is entitled to his recognized presumption of innocence.[46] Where, in accordance with the rules stated supra § 22, the intent with which the act charged was done is not an essential element of the offense, intent need not be shown,[47] but, where it is an essential element, it must be shown.[48] So, too, where guilty knowledge on the part of defendant is necessary to constitute the offense charged, such knowledge must be shown,[49] but proof of such knowledge is not necessary where it is not an essential element of the offense.[50] The intent to use or sell prohibited food stuffs may be presumed in the first instance from the possession of such food stuffs by a dealer therein,[51] particularly where such food stuffs are found among unprohibited products,[52] but such a presumption may be rebutted,[53] as, for example, by proof of compliance with regulatory provisions governing the segregation, removal, and destruction of such merchandise.[54] The intent or fact of conscious imitation may be inferred from the fact that the article sold is actually an imitation.[55] On an indictment for selling diseased meat without making it known to the buyer, it is sufficient for the state to prove that defendant knowingly sold such meat, the presumption arising from such proof being that the sale was unlawful, and it is incumbent on defendant to prove that he disclosed to the buyer the fact that the meat was unsound.[56] Under a statute providing that a sale of oleomargarine or other article by any person representing it to be butter shall be presumptive evidence of guilt, the presumption is not rebutted by showing the absence of knowledge of the adulteration and of an intent to deceive, and may be met only by controverting the prosecutor's evidence showing the sale and false representations.[57] An intent to do an act in violation of law is not negatived by the testimony of defendant that he had endeavored to comply with the law.[58] If the state proves all the necessary facts, the burden passes to defendant to establish any affirmative defense he may have.[59] Thus defendant must prove by a preponderance of the evidence the affirmative defense of a signed guaranty by the seller from whom defendant bought the food that it is not adulterated or misbranded.[60]

60. Pa.—Commonwealth v. Lutz, 9 A.2d 481, 137 Pa.Super. 449.

b. Admissibility

The admissibility of evidence in a prosecution for violation of a pure food law is governed by the usual rules of evidence as applied to criminal cases. The results of an analysis of food, made in accordance with the requirements of the statute, are admissible.

On a criminal prosecution for violation of the pure food laws, evidence will be held admissible[61] or inadmissible[62] in accordance with the usual rules of evidence as applied to criminal cases. Thus, on a trial for selling adulterated milk evidence that pure milk does not always come up to the standard fixed by statute is not admissible.[63] Where knowledge of the adulteration is not necessary to a conviction, evidence of defendant's lack of such knowledge is irrelevant and inadmissible.[64] Under an indictment charging sale of a prohibited article, evidence is admissible to show that the article defendant was charged with selling was not embraced within the terms of the statute defining the offense.[65]

Results of analysis. A common mode of proof of adulteration of food is by showing the result of an analysis of the suspected article, and in a number of jurisdictions such proof is admissible under express statutory provision.[66] For evidence of the analysis to be admissible, and to have the effect provided by statute, the sample must be taken and the analysis made strictly in accordance with the method prescribed,[67] although, where the methods provided for are merely directory, failure to comply therewith strictly does not of itself exclude the result of the analysis.[68] Where there is no suggestion in the statute to the contrary, the provision of a mode of proof by analysis does not exclude other appropriate evidence.[69]

c. Weight and Sufficiency

The weight and sufficiency of the evidence are governed by the rules of evidence applicable in criminal cases generally. The result of an analysis may be made conclusive evidence of adulteration, but such evidence does not preclude evidence attacking the manner in which the analysis was made.

On a criminal prosecution for the sale of a prohibited article of food or other violation of the pure food laws, the evidence will be held sufficient[70] or insufficient[71] to sustain a conviction, or to establish a prima facie case,[72] or to take the case to the jury,[73] or to prove particular facts,[74] in accordance with the rules applicable in criminal cases generally. So, too, on a preliminary hearing the sufficiency of the evidence to warrant holding accused to answer is governed by the general rules applicable to such hearings,[75] as discussed in Criminal Law § 345.

Results of analysis. It has been held to be competent for the legislature to provide that a chemical analysis showing adulteration shall be conclusive evidence of adulteration and incapable of contradiction except by another analysis.[76] However, such evidence does not preclude evidence on the part of defendant to show that the sample analyzed was not a fair sample,[77] or that the analysis was so long delayed that the sample must have become, by natural deterioration, worthless for analytical purposes;[78] and, where it is not practicable to controvert the testimony as to the results of an analysis by another analysis, it can be controverted by evidence of collateral facts going to prove that the analysis was incorrect.[79] It has also been held that, where, through the prosecution's fault, defendant is precluded from having a proper analysis made on his own behalf, evidence of the prosecution's analysis is insufficient to support a conviction.[80] The Puerto Rico statute, as to adulteration of milk, does not make the report of the government expert an irrebuttable presumption of adulteration or dilution.[81] Apart from the question of its conclusiveness, the sufficiency of evidence of the results of analysis to sustain a conviction or prove particular facts is governed by the general principles of evidence.[82]

Circumstantial evidence. The fact of adulteration is provable in general by either direct or circumstantial evidence.[83] Likewise, a knowledge of the adulteration[84] and an intent to sell,[85] where essential to a conviction, need not be proved by positive and direct evidence, but may be inferred from all the circumstances.

with respect to appeals in criminal cases, see Criminal Law §§ 1623–1957, it has been held that a notice of appeal from a conviction for violation of the pure food law in which the name of the appealing party is inserted in the body thereof is sufficient;[87] and that defendant, as a general rule, may not rely on objections that were not made at the trial.[88] Defendant cannot on an appeal from a conviction for violating an order of a milk control board, attack the order as being based on erroneous considerations, where he failed to appeal from the order when promulgated as provided by statute.[89]

§ 49. Sentence and Punishment

The provisions of the statutes with regard to sentence and punishment must be strictly followed.

It has been said that the disposition on a conviction for willful violation of a food law should be swift and severe.[90] The provisions of the statutes with regard to sentence and punishment must be strictly followed.[91] Thus, if the statute imposes a fine for the first offense and both fine and imprisonment for the second offense, on a trial of defendant on two indictments, a sentence of imprisonment for the offense committed prior in time should not be imposed,[92] but such sentence of fine and imprisonment may be imposed for a second offense, although the indictment for the second offense was returned by the grand jury only on the day immediately following sentence for the first offense.[93] A statute for the violation of which the court is bound to impose a sentence of imprisonment is not applicable to a corporation.[94]

VI. SEARCHES, SEIZURES, AND FORFEITURES

§ 50. In General

Under appropriate statutes or ordinances, unwholesome food may in proper cases be seized and destroyed; but as a rule such destruction is authorized only where there is some immediate necessity for it.

In a number of jurisdictions, under statutes or ordinances enacted pursuant to the police power for the protection of the public health, unwholesome food may, in proper cases, be seized and destroyed.[95] applicable to slaughter of calves and their preparation for food are complied with, his stamp does not certify compliance with other provisions, and in prosecution, under one of such other provisions, for selling calves weighing less than forty pounds when dressed, instruction that defendant could not rely on such stamp was proper.—Commonwealth v. Cohen, 146 N.E. 228, 250 Mass. 570.

(2) In a prosecution for having in possession with intent to sell decomposed and contaminated food, an instruction that, if the meat was not kept by defendant to be served to boarders, but was to be laid aside for the purpose of being thrown away, the verdict should be for defendant was held sufficiently to present the defense that the meat was not to be served, but was to be thrown away.—State v. Grays Harbor Commercial Co., 214 P. 13, 124 Wash. 227.

(3) In prosecution for transporting in interstate commerce sacks of animal food branded "protein not less than 43%," but containing not more than thirty-eight and fifty-six one hundredths per cent protein content, charge authorizing conviction on finding that protein content fell short of forty-three per cent "by any fraction of a per cent" was held proper. —U. S. v. Feeders' Supply & Manufacturing Co., D.C.Mo., 15 F.Supp. 385.

Questions of fact for jury

(1) In prosecution for possession of meat of calves less than four weeks old with intention of selling it, comparative weight to be given testimony of veterinarians and of lay witnesses was a question for jury.—People v. Ferris, 278 N.W. 740, 283 Mich. 699.

(2) In prosecution of egg dealer wherein acts were charged which would render egg dealer subject to conviction under provision of Pure Food and Drug Act relating to sale of adulterated food or under provision of Egg Law prohibiting sale of, or exposing for sale, eggs for human consumption which are not free from mould and other defects, whether egg dealer sold eggs or exposed them for sale or whether eggs were offered for sale within prohibition of the respective statutes were questions for jury.—Ferch v. People, 74 P.2d 712, 101 Colo. 471.

(3) In prosecution of egg dealer for selling or offering for sale eggs unfit for human consumption, whether dealer had the bad eggs in his place of business for sale to owners of fox farms and for feeding hogs was a question for jury.—Ferch v. People, supra.

State interference with federal control

(1) Although there is no authority under the federal Renovated Butter Act to confiscate or destroy materials, the power to condemn being restricted to the finished product, nevertheless a state attempting under its own law to condemn butter ma-

Such destruction is usually authorized only on its being made to appear that there is some immediate necessity for it,[96] and, at least in some jurisdictions, after notice to the owner and an opportunity to be heard in defense of his property, see infra § 52. An officer who condemns and destroys food stuffs must keep strictly within the power conferred by the statute, and if he exceeds his authority he is individually liable for the value of the food stuffs destroyed.[97]

§ 51. Under Federal Pure Food and Drug Law

Under the federal Pure Food and Drugs Act the seizure and destruction of adulterated or misbranded articles of food transported in interstate shipment is authorized, and the proceedings for forfeiture must conform as near as may be to proceedings in admiralty. On payment of costs and filing a proper bond, seized goods may be repossessed by the owner.

Under the federal Pure Food and Drugs Act, the seizure and destruction of adulterated or misbranded articles of food transported in interstate commerce for sale are authorized.[98] The remedy terials used to make finished butter to be sold in interstate commerce would be interfering with the federal law for inspection, grading, etc., of finished butter, but the state has power over any of the finished product when offered for sale within the state.—Cloverleaf Butter Co. v. Patterson, Ala., 62 S.Ct. 491, 315 U.S. 148, 86 L.Ed. 754, reversing, C.C.A., 116 F.2d 227, certiorari granted 61 S.Ct. 834, 313 U.S. 551, 85 L.Ed. 1515.

Food only partly unfit

(1) Public health officers have no right to confiscate and destroy articles of food in bulk simply because some portion may be affected and unfit for use, when the good can be detected and readily separated, provided the spoiled portion does not contaminate the whole.—Baker v. Latses, 206 P. 553, 60 Utah 38.

26 C.J. p 781 note 17.

Purposes of statute

(1) The object of this act is to keep adulterated articles out of the channels of interstate commerce, or if they enter such commerce to condemn them while in transit, or in original or unbroken packages after reaching their destination.—Hipolite Egg Co. v. U. S., Ill., 31 S.Ct. 364, 220 U.S. 45, 55 L.Ed. 364.

(2) The provision for confiscation and condemnation of food which consists in whole or in part of a filthy animal or vegetable substance was designed to protect the aesthetic tastes and sensibilities of consuming public.—U. S. v. 133 Cases of Tomato Paste, D.C.Pa., 22 F.Supp. 515.

What constitutes adulteration

(1) The fact that oats, which in their natural state contain up to twenty-five per cent of foreign matter, are permitted to be shipped does not prevent the forfeiture of oats containing less than twenty-five per cent of foreign matter, where a certion proportion of the foreign matter had been intentionally added to the natural oats and thus constituted an adulteration.—U. S. v. 154 Sacks of Oats, D.C.Va., 283 F. 985.

(2) For food to be adulterated by reason of its being mixed, colored, coated, or stained in a manner whereby damage or inferiority is concealed, it is necessary that the food be damaged or inferior, and that it was mixed so that its inferiority was concealed.—U. S. v. Ten Cases, More or Less, Bred Spred, C.C.A.Iowa, 49 F. 2d 87.

(3) So, an orange juice preparation sold in interstate commerce to retailers for dilution and sale over the counter as an iced drink, truthfully labeled as consisting of orange juice, sugar, fruit acid, certified color, and benzoate of soda, was not "adulterated" so as to be subject to condemnation on ground that its inferiority to pure orange juice was concealed.—U. S. v. Nesbitt Fruit Products, C.C.A.La., 96 F.2d 972, affirming, D.C., U. S. v. 492 Cases, More or Less, of Orange Juice, Each Case Containing Two One-Gallon Jugs, 20 F.Supp. 520, rehearing denied, C. C.A., U. S. v. Nesbitt Fruit Products, 97 F.2d 1018.

(4) For food to be adulterated by the presence of filthy, decomposed, or putrid animal or vegetable substance, so as to warrant its condemnation, it need not be injurious to the health.—U. S. v. 133 Cases of Tomato Paste, D.C.Pa., 22 F.Supp. 515—U. S. v. Two Hundred Cases, More or Less, of Canned Salmon, D. C.Tex., 289 F. 157.

(5) The same is true of food adulterated by the mixture or addition of substances, so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength.—A. O. Andersen & Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Wash., 284 F. 542.

(6) A product is adulterated if it contains any poisonous or deleterious substance which may render it injurious to health.—United States v. 1232 Cases American Beauty Brand Oysters, D.C.Mo., 43 F.Supp. 749.

(7) If the poisonous or deleterious substance is not added but inheres in the product itself, the quantity of such substance must be such as ordinarily renders the product injurious to health.—United States v. 1232 Cases American Beauty Brand Oysters, supra.

(8) Even if the poisonous or deleterious substance is added, the test of whether the product may be injurious to health is not the proportionate amount of harmful ingredient in the food product itself, but amount contained in final product intended to be consumed by the public.—U. S. v. One Can of Kololiva, D.C.Mass., 24 F.Supp. 110.

(9) A food which consists in whole or in part of a "filthy" animal or vegetable substance is subject to confiscation, whether or not the filth is perceptible to the consumer.—U. S. v. 133 Cases of Tomato Paste, D.C.Pa., 22 F.Supp. 515.

(10) Other holdings relating to confiscation for adulteration see 26 C.J. p 781 note 17 [e].

(11) Adulteration of food generally see supra § 15.

Misbranding

(1) While a distinctive name may be purely arbitrary, it must be one that distinguishes the article; and where more than one name, each descriptive of an article, are united, it amounts to misbranding if the article sold does not contain any of the articles generally known individually by any of such names.—U. S. v. Forty Barrels and Twenty Kegs of Coca Cola, Tenn., 36 S.Ct. 573, 241 U.S. 265, 60 L.Ed. 995.

(2) Where the term "orange juice sweetened" was descriptive and meant an orange juice that had been made sweet without any limitation as to degree of sweetness, condem-

in rem so provided applies not only where adulterated goods have been shipped from one state to another for sale, but also where they were intended by the consignee to be used solely as raw material in the manufacture of some other product.[99] Under this act, the proceedings for forfeiture are required to conform as near as may be to the proceedings in admiralty;[1] but it was not intended to liken such proceedings to those in admiralty beyond the seizure of the property by process in rem,[2] rights being determined as in. any action at law.[3] It has been pointed out that the statute does not declare the goods ipso facto forfeited by an infraction of the act,[4] nor authorize the seizure of food claimed to be subject to forfeiture prior to the commencement of proceedings for a forfeiture in court,[5] nor does it authorize seizure by a private person.[6]

Imported goods. Under this statute there is also authority for the examination of articles of food sought to be imported, for the exclusion of such as are found to be adulterated or misbranded, and for the destruction of such excluded goods unless exported within three months from the date of notice or refusal of entry.[7]

Repossession of seized goods by the owner may be obtained on payment of costs and the giving of a bond to the effect that the goods will not be sold or otherwise disposed of contrary to the provisions of the act, or of the laws of any state, territory, district, or insular possession.[8]

The right to intervene in a libel against food cannot be determined on the same basis as a strict admiralty proceeding involving a ship, and the government should not interpose technical objections to deprive persons vitally interested in the result of the litigation of an opportunity to be heard.[9] nation of preparation described as "orange juice sweetened" because fifty per cent sugar or certified coloring matter had been added, was not authorized.—U. S. v. 492 Cases, More or Less, of Orange Juice, Each Case Containing Two One-Gallon Jugs, D. C.La., 20 F.Supp. 520, affirmed, C.C. A., U. S. v. Nesbitt Fruit Products, 96 F.2d 972, rehearing denied 97 F. 2d 1018.

(3) Oats of the "sample grade" being a natural mixture of oats containing a certain proportion of wild oats, selling as "sample grade" a mixture containing such proportion of wild oats, part of which were intentionally added, is misbranding. —U. S. v. 154 Sacks of Oats, D.C. Va., 294 F. 340.

Use after interstate shipment

The use to which adulterated food may be put after it has been shipped in interstate commerce is immaterial on the question of the government's right to forfeit because of such shipment.—U. S. v. 52 Drums Maple Syrup, C.C.A.Vt., 110 F.2d 914—U. S. v. Nesbitt Fruit Products, C.C.A. La., 96 F.2d 972, affirming, D.C., U. S. v. 492 Cases, More or Less, of Orange Juice, Each Case Containing Two One-Gallon Jugs, 20 F.Supp. 520, rehearing denied, C.C.A., U. S. v. Nesbitt Fruit Products, 97 F.2d 1018.

For foreign shipment

Dried figs prepared for foreign purchaser who processed like fruit to make coffee flavoring were not subject to seizure, although shipment contained deleterious matter and law of purchaser's country prohibited use of impure materials in coffee admixtures, since foreign purchaser might free figs of deleterious matter before converting them to coffee flavoring, or might divert them to another proper use.—U. S. v. Catz American Co., C.C.A.Cal., 53 F.2d 425.

Entire shipment or contents of separate packages

(1) The word "article" in the statute providing for seizure and condemnation of "any article of food" that is adulterated or misbranded is used in a broad and comprehensive sense, and as applied to a shipment of a food product in containers, as canned salmon, has reference to the shipment as a whole, and to authorize condemnation it is not necessary to prove that each individual can is adulterated.—A. O. Andersen & Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Wash., 284 F. 542.

(2) On the other hand, it has been held that the word "article," applies to the food itself, and not to the case or package in and by means of which the shipment is effected, and that only the contents of those packages found bad may be condemned. —U. S. v. Two Hundred Cases, More or Less, of Canned Salmon, D.C.Tex., 289 F. 157.

26 C.J. p 781 note 19.

On taking of libel pro confesso, by reason of claimant's failure to answer or contest the allegations, it is nevertheless the duty of the court, before entering a decree of condemnation, to see that a case is made out.—U. S. v. Six Hundred Fifty Cases of Tomato Catsup, D.C.R.I., 166 F. 773.

Effect of decree

As in the case of a decree in admiralty, a decree forfeiting food is binding on all parties in interest if proper notice of the proceedings is given.—Kansas City Wholesale Grocery Co. v. Weber Packing Corporation, 73 P.2d 1272, 93 Utah 414.

§ 52. Preliminary Proceedings

Proceedings for condemnation under the federal Pure Food and Drugs Act may be instituted by the district attorney on recommendation of the secretary of agriculture, on the complaint of any state health officer, or on any adequate proof, and a hearing on notice is not a condition precedent, although under state statutes destruction of food stuffs is usually authorized only after notice and opportunity to be heard.

Proceedings under the federal Pure Food and Drugs Act for the condemnation of goods for adulteration or misbranding may be instituted by the district attorney on recommendation of the secretary of agriculture,[10] on complaint of any state health officer,[11] or on any adequate proof,[12] and a hearing, on notice, is not a condition precedent to the institution of such proceedings;[13] nor is a seizure of the food a condition precedent to the filing of a libel for its condemnation.[14] However, in order to render the decree binding on parties in interest it is necessary, as in admiralty proceedings, to give notice by publication of the seizure and of the time assigned for the return of the process and the hearing of the cause.[15] Under state statutes or municipal ordinances, the destruction of food stuffs is usually authorized only after notice to the owner and opportunity to be heard,[16] but under some circumstances destruction has been authorized on an ex parte hearing without notice to the owner;[17] and it has been held that whether or not any notice or hearing shall be given is largely a matter of legislative discretion.[18]

Monitions and attachments. In view of the provision of the federal Pure Food and Drugs Act that proceedings shall conform as near as may be to the proceedings in admiralty, see supra § 51, the cour may order the issue of monitions and attachment on informations which are wholly unsupported b oath or affirmation.[19]

§ 53. Defenses

The act of a government agent in misbranding a foo product is no defense; neither is the undisclosed inten of the owner not to use goods as food a defense, wher the article comes within the definition of food.

The act of an agent of the government in mis branding a food product cannot be set up as a de fense in a proceeding for the condemnation of suc product.[20] The undisclosed intent of the owner no to use goods for the purpose of food is no defens in such a proceeding, when such goods come withi the definition of an adulterated article of food.[21]

§ 54. Pleading and Evidence

a. Pleadings
b. Evidence

a. Pleadings

The libel should allege all the facts necessary t make out a case for forfeiture; exceptions to the libel, serving the same purpose as a motion to strike, may b filed, and the libel may be summarily dismissed. Th material allegations of a libel must be proved as laid.

In view of the provision of the federal Pure Foo and Drugs Act that proceedings for forfeiture shal conform as near as may be to proceedings in ad miralty, reference to the discussion of pleadings i Admiralty §§ 118–131 may be found useful in con sidering questions relating to pleadings in a pro ceeding for condemnation of food. A libel unde on cans and who would have to compensate purchaser for any loss by reason of seizure was entitled to intervene as vitally affected by proceedings.—U. S. v. 397 Cases, etc., of Salad Oil, supra.

When objection may be made

(1) After the case has been tried, it is too late to question the right of claimant to intervene.—U. S. v. Two Hundred Cases, More or Less, of Canned Salmon, D.C.Tex., 289 F. 157.

(2) Objection by district attorney to claimant's being permitted to interplead or file a brief in condemnation suit, in absence of evidence that claimant is a party in interest or bona fide owner of property seized, is made too late, where court had previously permitted claimant to answer, and the answer had been withdrawn with assent of district attorney.—U. Before trial of issues

In a proceeding for violation of the cold storage act by keeping pork loins more than six months in storage, where the controversy involved the right of property, it was error for the court, on application of plaintiff and before trial on the merits, t order the seizure and sale of suc property by provisional orders, wher such seizure and sale would rende ineffectual a judgment obtained afte trial.—Columbus Packing Co. v. the federal Pure Food and Drugs Act for the destruction of unwholesome food that has been transported in interstate commerce and remains unloaded, unsold, or in original unbroken packages, need not allege that such transported food was "for sale;"[22] and where the libel describes the articles transported as articles of food, it need not allege that they were intended for other than good uses.[23] It is not necessary to allege the date when the goods were shipped in interstate commerce,[24] or to state the place of seizure or the district within which the property is brought beyond the mere allegation that the property is within the district.[25] A libel to condemn food on the ground of misbranding should set forth the brand used and the facts necessary to show its falsity or misleading character.[26] The want of a sufficient verification of a libel is not a ground for exception or demurrer to the substance of the libel.[27]

Exceptions to the libel may be filed,[28] which serve practically the same purpose as a motion to strike for failure to disclose a cause of action,[29] so that averments in the libel properly pleaded, but not the conclusions of libelant, are deemed to be true in determining the sufficiency of the libel.[30] However, the court is not compelled on the argument of the exceptions to accept as true averments that are conclusively shown to have no basis in fact,[31] and where the court finds that there is no basis in fact for the libel, it may dismiss it summarily,[32] although such absence of a basis in fact should be so obvious that the jury could return but one possible verdict.[33]

Issues, proof, and variance. A libel charging a misbranding of an article of food in a specified particular cannot be supported by evidence of misbranding in a different particular.[34] A libel for condemnation of bottled waters, for false statements on the label regarding the curative or therapeutic effects of the water, is sustained by sufficiently showing the false and fraudulent character of any such claims.[35] Under a libel directed against particular containers of food, the issue is confined to the wholesomeness of the food in those containers only.[36]

b. Evidence

The burden is on the government to prove the facts alleged by at least a preponderance of the evidence, and on the claimant to prove any special facts which would exempt the food from forfeiture. The admissibility and sufficiency of the evidence is governed by general rules.

The burden of proving the facts alleged in the libel and necessary to make out a case is on the government,[37] and such facts must be proved by clear and satisfactory evidence,[38] or, at least by a fair preponderance of the evidence.[39] The burden of proving that words contained in the label or brand have a special meaning to the purchaser, so as to render the brand not misleading, is on claimant.[40] On the question as to whether the food sought to be condemned is within the class of food substances the transportation of which in interstate commerce is forbidden by law, the government is not limited to standards mentioned, nor to methods of analysis adopted in bulletins or circulars theretofore issued by the department of agriculture,[41] but may introduce evidence of the results of any test shown to be accurate.[42] The testimony of revenue officers acting under a search warrant is admissible if otherwise relevant,[43] although the warrant itself may have been illegal.[44] It is error to admit claimant's evidence of his intention to purify the product which was in an adulterated condition when shipped.[45] The sufficiency of the evidence is governed by the rules applicable to the sufficiency of evidence in general.[46]

§ 55. Trial and Review

Although the federal Pure Food and Drugs Act requires condemnation proceedings thereunder to conform as near as may be to proceedings in admiralty, the trial proceeds as in a court of common-law jurisdiction, and the method of review follows the practice in law actions.

Notwithstanding the federal Pure Food and Drugs Act provides that condemnation proceedings thereunder shall conform as nearly as may be to the proceedings in admiralty, yet the court in cases of seizures on land proceeds, not as a court of admiralty, but as a court of common-law jurisdiction, on a trial by jury.[47] Whether a sample of a food product, taken in proceedings under this statute, is fairly representative of the whole is a preliminary question to be determined by the court; although the circumstances may be such as to warrant the court in submitting this question to the jury.[48] Whether caffeine added to a food product is a deleterious ingredient within this statute is a question for the jury where the evidence is conflicting.[49] It is not error for the court, in the course of proceedings to condemn food under a pure food law, to order the taking and examination of additional samples if necessary to ascertain the truth of the issue.[50]

Appeal and error. The provision that proceedings under the federal Pure Food and Drugs Act shall conform, as near as may be, to proceedings in admiralty does not include appellate proceedings.[51] The method of review follows the practice in law actions,[52] and the proceeding is reviewable under the former practice only on writ of error.[53] The ruling of the trial court as to whether a sample of a food product, taken in a condemnation proceeding, is fairly representative will not be reviewed on appeal in the absence of the evidence on which it was based, and then only when error clearly appears;[54] nor will a finding of fact be reviewed where the evidence claimed to support a contrary finding is not part of the record.[55] Indeed, it has been held that where a jury is waived, the appellate court cannot reverse the judgment on the ground that the trial court had decided an issue of fact contrary to the weight of evidence.[56]

§ 56. Costs

A judgment for costs may be entered against claimant, and if there is a sale the costs and expenses may be taken out of the proceeds; costs against the government are not allowable. The payment of costs is a condition to the return of goods seized.

It has been held that, in a proceeding in rem under the federal Pure Food and Drugs Act, the court has jurisdiction to enter personal judgment for costs against claimant.[57] It has also been held that, under this statute, if the articles seized are sold, the costs and expenses of the proceeding are to be taken out of the proceeds of the sale,[58] but if such articles are destroyed no one is made liable for the costs and expenses.[59] Payment of costs is a condition to the return of goods seized.[60] Costs against the government are not allowable.[61]

VII. LIABILITY FOR INJURIES OR LOSSES

§ 57. In General

A person who sells or purveys articles of food must exercise reasonable care to insure their being wholesome and fit for consumption, and is liable in an action ex delicto on the ground of negligence for any injury resulting from their being unwholesome or unfit, and attributable to his lack of due care. The negligence must be the proximate cause of the injury, and the injured person's contributory negligence will, as a rule, bar any recovery.

Generally speaking, a person who sells or purveys articles of food is under a legal duty to exercise reasonable care to insure their being wholesome and fit for consumption, and is liable in an action ex delicto on the ground of negligence for any injury resulting from their being unwholesome or unfit if he knew, or by the exercise of reasonable care could have known, of their defective condition.[62]

Other statements of care required

(1) A purveyor of foods is required to exercise that degree of care which a prudent man exercises in selection of foods for consumption of himself and family.—Kirkland v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 171 So. 735, 233 Ala. 404.

(2) Purveyor of food and drink must use high degree of care and surveillance to exclude injurious foreign substances.—Levy v. Horn & Hardart Baking Co., 157 A. 369, 103 Pa.Super. 282.

Sale

Custom approved by storekeeper whereby customers helped themselves to drinks was in effect an invitation to customers to wait on themselves and constituted a continuing offer of sale while store was open.—Cordell v. Macon Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 192 S.E. 228, 56 Ga.App. 117.

Knowledge presumed

Seller of unwholesome food is presumed to know its condition and is liable in damages to purchaser who is made ill as result of its consumption.—MacLehan v. Loft Candy Stores, La.App., 172 So. 367.

Statute imposing civil liability

(1) A statute imposing civil liability on any person who knowingly or carelessly sells to another unwholesome provisions, the defect being unknown to the purchaser, by the use of which damage results to the purchaser or his family, has been held fairly to state the common-law rule although not stating the precise basis of liability; and liability under such a statute is not affected by the fact that defendant has a guaranty from his vendor which exonerates him from criminal liability under a penal pure food law, the only effect of such a guaranty in a civil action being that plaintiff cannot rely on a violation of the penal statute as constituting negligence per se. However, if defendant does not have such a guaranty, plaintiff need not allege or establish knowledge or negligence in fact to satisfy the civil liability statute, since he may establish the negligence referred to therein by showing negligence in law arising from the violation of the penal statute.—Donaldson v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 199 S.E. 213, 186 Ga. 870, 128 A.L.R. 456, answers to certified questions conformed to 200 S.E. 498, 59 Ga.App. 79.

(2) The statute does not apply to clerks or agents not shown to have undertaken to perform duty of inspection required of distributors or retailers, but is applicable only to principals.—Crosby v. Calaway, 16 S.E.2d 155, 65 Ga.App. 266.

A retail store agent or clerk, merely passing out articles of food sold and receiving the price thereof for the principal, is not liable for defects therein, unless he has actual knowledge of such defects, or assumes the legal responsibility of retailers and distributors of food, or owes some particular duty to the purchaser.[63] So, too, a bottler's delivery agent, who delivers sealed bottles to dealers, is not liable to the consumer for injuries due to deleterious matter in a bottle.[64]

The liabilities arising from the particular relationship of the persons involved in the sale, dispensation, and consumption of injurious food are considered infra §§ 58–64.

Proximate cause. In an action for injuries from food based on the theory of negligence, the negligence must be the proximate cause of the injuries.[65] On the theory that there can be no recovery for physical injuries resulting from fright, it has been held that plaintiff cannot recover for illness caused by his seeing an insect in the food which he was eating;[66] but there is authority for the view that physical illness, caused by the mere sight of insects in the food which plaintiff was eating, is the proximate result of their presence, and warrants the recovery of damages.[67]

Contributory negligence. The general rules relating to contributory negligence as affecting the right to recover for negligence, considered in the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 116–174, also 45 C.J. p 941 note 27–p 1044 note 77, apply to the right of recovery for negligence in the sale or dispensation of food. Thus under the general common-law doctrine relating thereto, the contributory negligence of the person injured by impure food bars any recovery therefor,[68] and this is true notwithstanding the seller's liability is statutory[69] or based on the theory of negligence per se because of a violation of a penal statute.[70]

Negligence per se. While the sale of food in violation of the provisions of a pure food law is generally held to constitute negligence per se,[71] this

Violation of statute as proximate cause

In action against grocery store owner for injuries allegedly resulting from eating canned corn, finding of jury that "eating of the canned corn" was proximate cause of the injury exonerated grocery store owner from liability, on theory that such owner was negligent per se by selling the corn in violation of the pure food laws, since finding that act of selling the corn was proximate cause of injuries would be conflicting with finding of jury.—Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Walker, Civ.App., 104 S.W.2d 627, 631, reversed on other grounds Walker v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 112 S.W.2d 170, 131 Tex. 57.

Retailer's failure to inspect

Negligent omission of retailer to inspect coffee containing deleterious foreign substance is not such intervening cause of customer's injuries as relieves manufacturer.—Maddox Coffee Co. v. Collins, 167 S.E. 306, 46 Ga.App. 220.

Foreseeability of full extent of harm

If defendant's conduct is a substantial factor in bringing about the injury, he is liable, even though a physical condition of the injured person, which was neither known nor should have been known to defendant, makes the injury greater than that which defendant as a reasonable man should have foreseen as a probable result of his conduct.—Delta Nehi Bottling Co. v. Lucas, 185 So. 561, 184 Miss. 693.

§ 58. Liability of Dealer or Trader to Consumer

A retailer of food for human consumption must exercise due care to see that it is reasonably fit for the purpose intended, and is liable in negligence for failure to exercise the care required under the circumstances. Such liability extends to any person who might reasonably be expected to suffer injury from the unfit food.

It has been said broadly that a retailer of food for human consumption must exercise ordinary care to see that it is reasonably fit for the purpose intended.[73] Lack of due care is, of course, an essential element of a food case grounded on negligence[74] but what constitutes due care varies with the circumstances. Thus one who sells articles of food not in an original sealed package or container owes a duty of reasonable inspection of the commodity before placing it on the market for consumption, and if a discoverable defect or deleterious object is in the commodity when sold the seller may be held liable for negligence[75] although his particular dereliction is not shown.[76] On the other hand, to hold a retailer of standard packaged or bottled goods liable for defects therein more positive negligence is generally required.[77] In the handling or sale of such packaged or bottled goods, inspection is not ordinarily required, expected, or anticipated of the dealer,[78] his duty as to such goods

"The retail dealer . . . is charged with . . . that degree of care necessary for the protection of customers against impurities or contamination that might ordinarily be discoverable by any usual or ordinary tests. N.J.—Lipari v. National Grocery Co., 198 A. 393, 120 N.J.Law 97.

The reason for the rule is that there is ordinarily no way for the dealer to inspect the food without breaking the package, which would of itself in many cases make the food unfit and in most cases unmarketable.—Davis v. Williams, 198 S. E. 357, 58 Ga.App. 274.

Patent imperfections

(1) If there is anything about the condition of an unbroken or sealed package or bottle that indicates that its contents may be unfit or unwholesome, it has been held to be the retailer's duty, in the exercise of reasonable care, to investigate further the condition of the food before selling it.—Davis v. Williams, 198 S. E. 357, 58 Ga.App. 274.

(2) Thus it has been held that a retailer who sells a bottled beverage containing foreign or deleterious matter visible through the transparent glass bottle and through the transparent contents, may be found to have been negligent, and may be liable even if the consumer was likewise negligent, since the duty of one who sells food for immediate consumption, to know of unwholesomebeing limited to supplying goods packed by reliable manufacturers, and such as are without imperfections that may be discovered by the exercise of the care, skill, and experience of dealers in such products generally.[79]

Negligence per se. The sale of food in violation of the provisions of a pure food law is actionable negligence per se.[80]

Extent and character of liability. Where the cause of action is predicated, not on implied warranty, but on the negligent sale by a retail dealer of unwholesome food products for immediate consumption, liability for the damages resulting from the sale of such food products is not confined alone to the immediate purchaser thereof.[81] The liability extends to any persons who might reasonably be expected to suffer injury therefrom.[82] A seller of contaminated food in the original package without actual knowledge of the contamination is not jointly liable with the manufacturer, but is at most only secondarily liable to the injured customer,[83] primary liability being that of the manufacturer, bottler, or packer who put out the article, see infra § 59.

ness of the food, differs from the buyer's duty in that seller has duty of knowing or exercising reasonable care to know, whereas buyer's duty arises only after knowledge, and there is no duty to know.—Albany Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Shiver, Ga. App., 20 S.E.2d 181—Davis v. Williams, supra.

(3) But according to other authority the retailer is not negligent in such case, there being no greater duty on the seller than on the buyer to discover such deleterious matter in the bottle.—Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Swilling, 57 S.W.2d 1029, 186 Ark. 1149.

Pork containing trichinæ
(1) Pork containing trichinæ and sold in a condition requiring cooking or further processing before consumption is generally held not within the contemplation of statutes forbidding the sale of unfit, unwholesome, or adulterated food, since such pork when properly cooked is not unwholesome or unfit for consumption.
U.S.—Feinstein v. Daniel Reeves, Inc., D.C.N.Y., 14 F.Supp. 167.
Ill.—Zorger v. Hillman's, 4 N.E.2d 900, 287 Ill.App. 357.

(2) But pork which has been processed and is sold for consumption without cooking or further processing it, if it contains trichinæ, adulterated so as to be unfit for food within the meaning of such a statute.—Catalanello v. Cudahy Packing Co., 34 N.Y.S.2d 37, 264 App.Div. 723, affirming 27 N.Y.S.2d 637.

(3) An animal containing trichinæ has been held not "diseased" in the ordinary sense of the term as used in a statute prohibiting the sale of the product of a diseased animal.—Dressler v. Merkel, Inc., supra.

(4) However, there is authority to the effect that such animal is "diseased" within the meaning of a pure food law.—Troietto v. G. H. Hammond Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 110 F.2d 135, Ohio law.

"Unwholesome" within statute providing for punishment of seller of unwholesome provisions without making condition thereof known to buyer, means diseased, corrupted, adulterated, or other condition having effect of rendering food deleterious to health of normal persons generally.—Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Hughes, 3 N.E.2d 415, 131 Ohio St. 501, affirming 4 N.E.2d 700, 53 Ohio App. 225.

If defendant has a guaranty from his vendor which, under the provisions of the pure food law, relieves him of criminal liability for a violation thereof, the penal statute is not available to make out negligence per se.—Donaldson v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 199 S.E. 213, 186 Ga. 870, 128 A.L.R. 456, answers to certified questions conformed to 200 S. E. 498, 59 Ga.App. 79.

Knowledge of unwholesomeness
If a statute making it an offense to sell unfit, deleterious, unwholesome, or adulterated food does not require guilty knowledge on the part of the seller, such knowledge need not be alleged or proved in order to invoke the violation of the statute as negligence per se.

Making condition known to buyer
Under statute denouncing sale of unwholesome provisions without making their condition known to buyer, buyer need not inquire whether provisions are unwholesome, and seller's silence at time of purchase makes the statute applicable.—Drock v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 22 N.E.2d 547, 61 Ohio App. 291.

Liability to consumer. Although differing in their reasoning,[84] it is generally agreed by the authorities that a manufacturer, packer, or bottler of foods or beverages is directly liable to a consumer for an injury caused by the unwholesomeness or the unfitness of such articles, although purchased from a dealer or middleman and not from such manufacturer, bottler or packer,[85] and, a fortiori, where it is purchased by the consumer directly from such manufacturer, packer, or bottler;[86] and a manu-

Primarily, rather than jointly, liable
Manufacturer is primarily liable and retailer only secondarily liable for injuries sustained by customer purchasing unwholesome food in original package from retailer; the several liabilities are not joint.—Canton Provision Co. v. Gauder, 196 N.E. 634, 130 Ohio St. 43—26 C.J. p 785 note 86.

facturer of food products has been held liable for injuries to one who did not buy the food from the manufacturer or from a dealer to whom the manufacturer had sold it, but who nevertheless had partaken of it and been injured thereby.[87]

Although, as appears in the C.J.S. title Sales § 305, also 55 C.J. p 669 note 1–p 670 note 20, there is considerable difference of opinion as to whether a consumer may recover from the manufacturer on the theory of implied warranty, most authorities agree that such a recovery may be grounded on negligence,[88] as an exception to the general rule that a manufacturer is not liable for negligence to third persons not in privity.[89]

§ 59. Liability of Manufacturer, Packer, or Bottler

A manufacturer, packer, or bottler of foods or beverages must exercise at least reasonable care to see that such articles are fit and wholesome, and he is liable for injuries resulting from their unwholesomeness if, and according to some authorities, only if, he is negligent. His liability extends even to a consumer who purchased

A manufacturer, packer, or bottler of foods or beverages is required to exercise due care to see that such articles are fit and wholesome.[90] Some authorities have said that a high or the highest degree of care is required,[91] while others have held that there must be reasonable care[92] at least,[93] or ordinary care,[94] or that degree of skill, care, and diligence that a reasonably skillful and diligent person engaged in a similar business would have used,[95] and it has been pointed out that even the

Different views reconciled

"The difference [in the various statements of the degree of care required] will ordinarily be found to lie rather in a variance in the vigilance, caution and skill required to insure the wholesomeness of different products than in the degree of care required. For instance, reasonable care might require very much more elaborate precautions to make sure that canned oysters or canned fish are free from toxic substances . . . than would be needed to make sure that rolled oats are safe and wholesome."—Armour & Co. v. Leasure, 9 A.2d 572, 580, 177 Md. 393.

Standard in the trade

(1) It has been held that the custom of others engaged in a like business is not the absolute test; the test is what an ordinarily prudent person engaged in such business would do.

Tex.—Texas Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Kubena, Civ.App., 109 S.W.2d 1098.

(2) But it has also been held that if defendant used the machinery, methods, and processes which were accepted as standard in the trade, and which were as reliable and satisfactory as any others, it did not fail in the exercise of proper care.—Gerber v. Faber, Cal.App., 129 P.2d 485.

Due care after bottling

A bottler's duty does not end with the bottling but continues until delivery to the retailer.—Dr. Pepper Co. v. Brittain, 176 So. 286, 234 Ala. 548.

Issuing instructions with food

A person placing on the market an article represented by the circulars.

use of such care as an ordinarily careful and prudent person in a like business would use will not relieve a manufacturer of liability for the negligence of his employees.[96] For an injury resulting from the failure to exercise such care he is liable to respond in damages.[97] Nevertheless, authorities have frequently pointed out that, however exacting the duty or high degree of care imposed on manufacturers, negligence is a necessary element in the right of action,[98] and that the manufacturer is not an insurer of the wholesomeness and fitness of his product,[99] although it has been said that he is practically one.[1]

Negligence per se. If a manufacturer of a food product disobeys the prohibition or neglects to perform the duty imposed by a pure food statute, negligence is implied from such violation or neglect,[2] and, if the pure food law does not make knowledge or intent an element of the offense, he is liable for injuries resulting from the unwholesomeness of such food product regardless of his lack of knowledge of its unwholesomeness[3] or of the absence of

Facts not within statute

(1) In suit against manufacturer for negligently permitting food to become contaminated, injuring purchaser, a provision of the pure food law prohibiting adulteration of food was inapplicable since within the meaning of the statute "adulteration" means "adding" a foreign substance.—Armour & Co. v. Miller, 147 S.E. 184, 39 Ga.App. 228, affirmed 149 S.E. 698, 169 Ga. 201.

(2) A statute prohibiting sale of impure, adulterated, or unwholesome milk or cream was inapplicable to sale of cream in bottle containing pieces of broken glass since the glass did not become an ingredient or component part of the cream and hence was not the kind of adulterant contemplated by the statute.—Bourcheix v. Willow Brook Dairy, 196 N.E. 617, 268 N.Y. 1, 98 A.L.R. 1492, reversing 277 N.Y.S. 292, 243 App.Div. 721.

(3) The penal provision of federal meat inspection act denouncing sale of diseased or unwholesome meat for interstate or foreign commerce is limited to farmers, butchers, and retail dealers and affords no basis for recovery for injuries from packing company whose products are inspected and passed by inspection officers.—Kierstein v. Cudahy Packing Co., C.C.A.Pa., 80 F.2d 518, affirming, D.C., 9 F.Supp. 990.

Holding one's self out as manufacturer. One who puts out as his own an article of food manufactured by another is subject to the same liability as though he were its manufacturer.[5]

§ 60. Liability of Manufacturer or Wholesale Dealer to Retail Dealer

A manufacturer or wholesale dealer may be liable to a retail dealer for the loss of business, profits, and reputation resulting to the latter from the sale of unwholesome food of the former.

A manufacturer or wholesale dealer is not only liable to the consumer for injuries resulting from the sale of unwholesome food, see supra § 59, but is also liable to the retail dealer for the loss of business,[6] profits,[7] and reputation,[8] resulting to the latter from the sale of such food to his customers; and under certain circumstances the manufacturer has also been held liable to a retail dealer for the amount of a penalty incurred by the latter from the possession or resale of the goods sold.[9] Under a statute requiring the marking on any container of food of the net contents thereof, and making it unlawful to misrepresent in so doing, and providing that the name appearing on the container and the marking shall be deemed to constitute a guaranty, a dealer who purchased mislabeled cans from a wholesaler may recover from the manufacturer the losses he has suffered thereby even though there is no element of negligence involved.[10]

The principles governing the liability over of a manufacturer for damages paid by a retailer are considered in the C.J.S. title Indemnity §§ 20–27, also 31 C.J. p 446 note 83–p 457 note 79.

§ 61. Liability of Keeper of Public Eating Place

A keeper of a public eating place must use due care to see that the food served is fit for human consumption, and is liable for an injury caused by his negligence in failing to observe this duty. Although some authorities hold otherwise, the weight of authority is that a restaurant keeper is not an insurer of the food he serves.

A keeper of a public eating place, engaged in the business of serving food to customers, is bound to use due care and see that the food served to his customers, at his place of business, is fit for human consumption and may be eaten without its causing injury, and for an injury caused by negligence in failing to observe this duty to his patrons such keeper is liable.[11] It has been held that a seller of food, at a public eating place, to be consumed on the premises, is presumed to know of any unwholesome condition of the food and is liable for damages to a purchaser who is made ill on account of such unwholesomeness.[12] According to some authorities an innkeeper is not the insurer of the food he serves, and is not liable in the absence of negligence,[13] but according to other authority he is;[14] and the duty imposed by a statute may be so exacting as to render a restaurant keeper practically an insurer,[15] and no less liable when he buys the unfit food from others than when he makes it himself.[16] A restaurant keeper must use the same care in preparing food for patrons who have not yet entered the restaurant as for those who have.[17]

§ 62. Liability of Public Caterer

A public caterer is liable to an action of tort for negligence to any person attending an entertainment and made ill by the food furnished by the caterer.

A public caterer, who is employed by those who arrange for an entertainment to furnish food for all who may attend, is liable to an action of tort for negligence to any person who attends such entertainment and is made ill by partaking of the food furnished by him.[18]

§ 63. Liability of Person Furnishing Board to Laborers or Servants

One who for pay furnishes board at his table for laborers is liable for injuries resulting from unfit or unwholesome food furnished by him.

What is due care

(1) Reasonable care of café in preparation and preservation of fish as food takes into account that fish spoils quickly.—C. C. Hooper Café Co. v. Henderson, 137 So. 419, 223 Ala. 579.

(2) A restaurant operator must exercise same degree of care in selection and cooking of food for customers that a reasonably prudent man, skilled in such art, would exercise in selection and preparation of food for own private table.—Louis Pizitz Dry Goods Co. v. Waldrop, 186 So. 151, 237 Ala. 208—McCarley v. Wood Drugs, 153 So. 446, 228 Ala. 226—Travis v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 62 So. 851, 183 Ala. 415.

(3) If ordinary men would have forseen danger that some foreign substance might get into food, a restaurant keeper is under a duty to anticipate it.—Kenney v. Wong Len, 128 A. 343, 81 N.H. 427.

(4) If carrier, by exercise of reasonable care, would have known that food served in its dining car was contaminated it is liable.—King v. Davis, 296 F. 986, 54 App.D.C. 239.

Food unfit when bought by innkeeper

(1) Retailer and employee who actually dispenses ice cream by removing it from container in small quantities must exercise ordinary care to see that ice cream so furnished customers is free from harmful foreign matter, notwithstanding foreign matter entered into ice cream as result of manufacturer's negligence.—Crowley v. Lane Drug Stores, 189 S.E. 380, 54 Ga.App. 859.

(2) But where a restaurateur served a customer a can of chili which he first heated, unless the appearance of the chili put him on notice that something was wrong with it, he was entitled to assume that proper care was taken in its manufacture and canning, and was not required to exercise any extraordinary caution.—H. J. Heinz Co. v. Duke, 116 S.W.2d 1039, 196 Ark. 180.

That food is taken away and eaten elsewhere, so as to give rise to a possible action on implied warranty, does not affect the rule as to liability for negligence.—McPherson v. Capuano & Co., 121 S.E. 580, 31 Ga. App. 82.

Bones which are a natural part of the food served, as in the case of chicken, or turkey, or chops, are not foreign substances, and a customer cannot recover for injuries sustained by swallowing fragments of them.

One who sells poisonous animal fodder with knowledge of its condition is liable in tort to the purchaser for the death of an animal caused by eating it.[21] Implied warranty as a basis for recovery for injuries to animals resulting from their consumption of unfit food is considered in the C.J.S. title Sales § 331, also 55 C.J. p 768 note 40–p 769 note 50.

§ 65. Actions

Restaurant patrons who partook of the same food may join as plaintiffs; in an action based on negligence it is proper to join as defendants a manufacturer and his agent or a manufacturer and a retailer.

Questions relating to actions for injuries resulting from unfit or contaminated food are dealt with hereinafter in this section and in §§ 66–71.

Parties. In an action by a customer to recover for injuries resulting from eating food in defendant's restaurant, other persons who partook of the same food may join as plaintiffs.[22] In an action based on negligence it has been held proper to join as defendants a manufacturer and his agent,[23] or a manufacturer and a retailer.[24]

§ 66. —— Nature and Form of Action

Where recovery may be had either on the theory of negligence or on the theory of implied warranty, the plaintiff may ground his action on either theory or on both; and it has been held immaterial on which theory the action rests where the evidence is sufficient to justify a recovery on either.

Where recovery may be had either on the theory of negligence or on the theory of an implied warranty, the plaintiff may ground his action on either theory[25] or on both,[26] and it has been held that the court should not require plaintiff to elect whether to proceed in tort or on the implied warranty.[27] Indeed, it has been said that whether such an action is called one of warranty or of negligence it comes to the same thing; it sounds in tort;[28] and it is immaterial on which theory the action rests where the evidence is sufficient to justify a recovery on either theory.[29] It is likewise immaterial whether the foundation of an action for injuries occasioned by unwholesome or unfit food is laid in negligence or warranty, where the liability of defendant arises from his violation of a food statute.[30] The rule that where there is a positive duty created by implication of law independent of contract, although arising out of a relation or state of facts created by contract, an action on the case as for a tort will lie for violation or disregard of that duty, has been applied in actions for injuries caused by unfit or unwholesome food.[31]

§ 67. —— Defenses

Due care on the part of the defendant is a defense, and contributory negligence is likewise a defense even where the defendant's liability is statutory. The absence of notice to a manufacturer of the presence of foreign substances in the food is no defense.

The exercise of due care on the part of defendant is a defense to an action based on negligence in selling unwholesome food.[32] The fact that food has been duly inspected, as provided by statute, does not relieve a vendor thereof for liability for its unwholesomeness or unfitness.[33] Notwithstanding the statutory liability of the seller of impure food, the defense of plaintiff's contributory negligence is available.[34] A retail dealer may not recover of a a manufacturer or wholesaler damages for loss of trade sustained by him by reason of the sale of such product to his customers, if he was guilty of contributory negligence in making such sales.[35] Absence of notice to a manufacturer or bottler of the presence of foreign substances in the package or bottle is no defense.[36] A regulation requiring certain fish to be tagged and forbidding the removal of the tag by anyone other than the consumer does not relieve a restaurant keeper from liability for injuries to a customer caused by the presence of the metal tag, since the restaurant and not the person actually eating the fish is the consumer within the meaning of the statute.[37] The fact that the consumer acquired the food through an illegal transaction, as in a bingo game, is no defense for the manufacturer in the absence of any causal relation between the illegal act and the injury.[38]

§ 68. —— Pleading

a. In general
b. Issues, proof, and variance

a. In General

The declaration or complaint should aver plainly and distinctly all the facts showing plaintiff's right to recover, and this is generally accomplished by setting forth the facts from which the duty rises, the neglect thereof, and the resulting injury. In some instances negligence may be averred generally, but in others specific acts of negligence must be set forth.

As in civil actions generally, the declaration, complaint, or petition in an action for injuries from unwholesome food should aver plainly and distinctly all the facts showing plaintiff's right to recover.[39] As a general rule, it is sufficient to set forth the facts from which defendant's duty springs, the neglect of that duty, and the resulting injury.[40] It

(5) Petition alleging that manufacturer negligently permitted glass particles to be in coffee and that retailer negligently sold coffee made question for jury whether manufacturer alone or manufacturer and retailer were responsible for customer's injury.—Maddox Coffee Co. v. Collins, 167 S.E. 306, 46 Ga.App. 220.

Nature of foreign substance

A statement of claim in an action against an ice cream manufacturer for personal injuries resulting from a foreign substance allegedly contained in ice cream need not specify the nature of the substance, where it is apparent from the statement that it was swallowed and could not be successfully removed so that it would obviously be impossible to state its exact nature with certainty.—Murphy v. Yuengling Dairy Products, 34 Pa.Dist. & Co. 355, 6 Schuyl.Reg. 242.

Special damage from the use of the unwholesome food need not be alleged, as damage may be presumed. —Peckham v. Holman, 11 Pick., Mass., 484.

Nature of injury

A statement of claim in an action for personal injuries which alleges is not necessary to aver in terms the existence of the relation casting the duty on the vendor,[41] or that he knew of the injurious quality of the food;[42] but it is sufficient if it is made to appear that he ought to have known of it and was negligent in furnishing unwholesome food, by reason whereof plaintiff was injured.[43]

Some authorities have held that in proper cases a general averment of negligence is sufficient, it being unnecessary to aver specific acts of negligence,[44] at least where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies;[45] and it has been held sufficient if the complaint avers by way of conclusion defendant's breach of his duty.[46] It has also been held that while a general averment of negligence is sufficient against a general demurrer,[47] where a special demurrer is filed, raising the objection that the allegations are too general, the particulars of the negligence must be set forth.[48] However, even where a general averment of negligence is insufficient, it has been held that the complaint need only set forth what constituted the negligence, as by alleging that defendant caused or permitted a foreign substance to enter the food,[49] and need not specify the particular operation with respect to which defendant was negligent.[50]

Negligence per se. A petition alleging facts constituting a violation of a pure food law by defendant sufficiently alleges negligence per se,[51] but if the petition fails to allege all the facts necessary to show a violation of the statute it is insufficient.[52] It is not necessary to plead the pure food law in violation of which the articles of food were sold, as it is the duty of the court to take judicial notice of all public statutes.[53]

as an item of damage that plaintiff's nervous system was severely shocked is in that respect insufficient; it should specify whether the alleged shock to the nervous system caused an injury of a functional or of an organic nature.—Murphy v. Yuengling Dairy Products, 34 Pa. Dist. & Co. 355, 6 Schuyl.Reg. 242.

Allegation held sufficient
In action by cafe patron against Illinois packing company for damage from eating allegedly impure ham, complaint, charging that patron partook of ham bearing label of company, that company warranted the product to be a superior food for human consumption, but that it was in fact impure and contained deleterious matter which caused patron to become ill and that company in preparing, producing, packing, and offering the ham for sale was negligent, reckless, willful, and wanton, contained a sufficient general charge of negligence, of which general denial of answer made an issue submissible to the jury under proper instructions.—Boylston v. Defense of signed guaranty
In action for injuries resulting from eating of unwholesome food purveyed by dealer, whether dealer had prescribed guaranty signed by person from whom he purchased excepting him from prosecution under the provisions of pure food law was a matter for defense and not one which plaintiff would be required to negative in her petition.—Donaldson v. may be had either on the theory of an implied warranty or on the theory of negligence, it has been held proper to include counts based on each theory in the complaint.[54]

b. Issues, Proof, and Variance

The evidence offered or relied on to support or defeat a recovery must be confined to the issues raised by the pleadings. An immaterial variance may be disregarded.

As in other actions at law, the evidence offered or relied on to support or defeat a recovery in a food case must be confined to the issues raised by the pleadings.[55] Variance between an allegation that defendant negligently placed an injurious foreign substance in a bottle of beverage and proof that it was placed in the bottle by someone else and was there when the bottle was filled is immaterial and may be disregarded.[56] Where, in an action for selling unwholesome meat, plaintiff pleaded a particular sale, recovery could not be based on other sales on other days;[57] but under an allegation that plaintiff's injury occurred on, "to wit," a certain day, plaintiff is not strictly confined to proof that the injury occurred on that day.[58]

§ 69. —— Evidence

a. Presumptions and burden of proof
b. Admissibility
c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

(1) In general
(2) Presumptions and inferences of negligence; res ipsa loquitur

(1) In General

The burden is on the plaintiff to prove all the facts necessary to constitute a cause of action; but if he establishes a prima facie case the burden shifts to the defendant to rebut or overcome such case.

In actions to recover for injuries caused by unfit or contaminated food, the general rules as to presumptions and burden of proof apply.[59] Thus the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show the existence of all the facts necessary to constitute a cause of action.[60] Plaintiff must show defendant's connection with the food, that is, he must show that defendant manufactured, sold, or served the food, as the case may be;[61] he must prove that he ate or drank of the food alleged to have been unfit,[62] that such food was unwholesome or deleterious or contained a foreign substance,[63] and that the injuries resulted therefrom,[64] or, as some authorities have held, that the injury or illness was probably caused thereby, although every other possible cause is not excluded;[65] and he must show that defendant was guilty of negligence[66] or willful misconduct[67] in causing or permitting the food to be in the condition alleged. If plaintiff establishes a prima facie case, the burden shifts to defendant to rebut or overcome the case so made.[68]

Negligence "in and about bottling"

In action by consumer for unwholesome substance in bottled drink resulting from negligence of bottling company in and about bottling of drink, "negligence in and about bottling" as alleged in complaint included conduct in that respect which continued to time bottle was delivered to another for sale or consumption as against contention that complaint did not include negligence after the bottle left bottling machine.—Dr. Pepper Co. v. Brittain, 176 So. 286, 234 Ala. 548.

In appropriate cases, presumptions may be relied on to prove particular facts.[69]

Negligence per se. Where the violation of a pure food law is relied on as proof of negligence per se, the burden is on plaintiff to prove such a violation.[70]

(2) Presumptions and Inferences of Negligence; Res Ipsa Loquitur

The burden of proving defendant's negligence is often satisfied, or at least lightened, by proof of circumstances raising a presumption or inference of negligence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, or apart from that doctrine. The facts on which the application of the doctrine depends must be established by independent evidence, which, however, may also be circumstantial. A presumption of negligence so arising is rebuttable and shifts to the defendant the burden of rebutting it.

The burden of proving defendant's negligence in food cases so as to make out a prima facie case is often held satisfied by proof of circumstances raising a presumption or inference of negligence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.[71] Where this doctrine is applied two factors are generally present: (1) The immediate cause and the circumstances of the misadventure are such as would not have happened in the ordinary course of events if the person charged had used due care; (2) The manufacturer or dispenser is in a better position to know how the food was handled, the consumer not being presumed to have such knowledge as to enable him to prove the specific acts of negligence.[72] So it is generally held that the presence of a foreign substance in food, particularly where such food is within a sealed package, container, or bottle, raises a presumption of negligence on the part of someone connected with its preparation or handling.[73] A number of cases, without apparently referring to the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, have held that circumstantial evidence of this nature may constitute prima facie proof of negligence,[74] sufficient, if un-

rebutted, to sustain a verdict for plaintiff,[75] or may warrant an inference of negligence,[76] or may constitute evidence of negligence.[77]

Some authorities hold that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is inapplicable to establish actionable negligence on the part of a food manufacturer, as by the mere showing of a foreign deleterious substance in a sealed container, and that some additional evidence of negligence is required,[78] but that such additional evidence need only be circumstantial in order that an inference of negligence may arise;[79] and a similar rule has been recognized in cases holding the doctrine inapplicable under the facts of the particular case.[80] The distinction between a mere inference of negligence arising from proved circumstances and the presumption arising from the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has been said to be that in the latter case no further proof of negligence is required to shift the burden to defendant, whereas in the former case the inference does not necessarily affect the burden of proof.[81] The fact that res ipsa loquitur may be available in a

Facts sufficient to warrant inference

In action by cafe patron against packing company for damage from eating impure ham, evidence that patron became ill after eating the ham, that it was discolored and soft, that all who ate it were similarly affected, and none who ate in cafe on same day but who did not eat the ham became ill, coupled with medical diagnosis of food poisoning, warranted jury's inference of negligence in selection, processing, handling, and inspection of the meat.—Boylston v. Armour & Co., 12 S.E.2d 34, 196 S.C. 1.

given case to create a presumption of defendant's negligence does not dispense with proper proof of other elements of the cause of action.[82] It has been said that once the case goes to the trier of facts the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has no application, but the facts making the doctrine applicable in the first instance so as to take the case to the jury are available as a basis of inferring negligence.[83]

Mere proof that food was eaten and resulted in illness does not, under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur or otherwise, raise a presumption or make out a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the person charged, in the absence of other proof or circumstances connecting such person with the unwholesome or deleterious condition of the food.[84]

Conditions essential to application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur generally. Since the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur raises a presumption that the immediate cause of the injury was put into operation by defendant's negligence, at least two things must be shown by independent evidence before the doctrine can be applied. First, plaintiff must show the immediate cause of the injury, that is, he must show that the food was unwholesome or defective or contained a foreign deleterious substance, and that such condition caused the illness or injury;[85] but such evidence may be circumstantial[86] and need only be sufficient to warrant an inference of the fact.[87] Second, it is necessary to connect defendant with the unwholesome or defective condition of the food or the foreign substance in it; in other words, plaintiff must show that the condition existed when the product was in defendant's control, or at least must negative the possibility of its having been created after the product left his control.[88] Where the action is one against the manufacturer or bottler of a food product for injuries caused by the presence in the package or bottle of a foreign deleterious substance, there appears to be considerable disagreement as to how much proof of such connection must be adduced,[89] but much of this apparent lack of harmony has been said to arise from differences of fact which affect the principle.[90] Thus, where the package or bottle passes directly from the agent of the bottler or manufacturer to the consumer, the "thing speaks for itself" and creates a presumption not only that someone was negligent but that it was such bottler or manufacturer who was so negligent.[91] The same rule has been applied where the package or bottle comes from the manufacturer so sealed or otherwise so constructed that its contents reach the consumer without possibility of alteration by intermediate parties,[92] although there is authority denying that this is the test;[93] and it is likewise applied where the foreign substance is so planted or imbedded in the article purchased by the consumer, that its physical location therein conclusively demonstrates its presence there when the article came from the manufacturer;[94] but where the physical possession of the article has been in a third person, such as an intermediary vendor, and the conclusive continuity of control between defendant and the consumer is broken, as in the case of soft drink or milk bottles inclosed by caps which it is possible to remove and replace by the use of care, it has been held that a higher degree of proof, namely, a preponderance of evidence, is required to show that there has been no reasonable opportunity for tampering with the container or its contents in the time between the physical control by the bottler or manufacturer and by the consumer, and that its condition was unchanged.[95] If the evidence tends to show that the unwholesome condition of the food or the foreign substance therein may with equal or greater likelihood be the result of external causes operating thereon after the package or bottle left the manufacturer's control, the doctrine is inapplicable.[96]

The circumstances shown must be such as reasonably to exclude any conclusion other than that defendant's negligence caused the injury.[97] So the doctrine will not apply where defendant's proved conduct could not constitute negligence unless it occurred under circumstances not shown to have existed.[98] Where there is evidence of specific acts of negligence, the doctrine is inapplicable.[99]

Pleadings as affecting applicability of doctrine. The effect of plaintiff's pleading specific acts of negligence on his right to rely on or invoke the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in food cases depends on the view taken in the particular state as to the effect of such pleading in negligence cases generally, there being, as appears in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 220, also 45 C.J. p 1225 note 80–p 1228 note 94, considerable conflict among the authorities on that question. So there is authority for the view that the doctrine cannot be invoked by a plaintiff who alleges specific acts of negligence,[1] at least where he does not also allege negligence generally.[2] If the complaint alleges negligence generally, it is not necessary that it allege plaintiff's ignorance of the specific acts of negligence, his inability to ascertain them, and defendant's exclusive control.[3] of res ipsa loquitur casts on defendant the burden of explaining, rebutting, or otherwise overcoming such presumption,[5] as by showing that he used due care,[6] or that it is reasonably certain that the misadventure was not caused by any negligence on his part,[7] or that the foreign substance found in the food did not enter it while it was under his control.[8] As appears infra § 70 b, the sufficiency of defendant's rebuttal evidence is generally a question for the jury.

b. Admissibility

The general rules governing admissibility of evidence are applicable to food cases.

The general rules governing admissibility of evidence in civil actions are applicable in actions to recover for injuries caused by unfit or unwholesome food products.[9] Subject to those rules, it may be said generally that it is proper to admit any evidence tending to establish or to disprove the allegations of the declaration or complaint,[10] or of the answer,[11] as, for example, evidence relating to the proximate cause of the injury or illness,[12] defendant's freedom from negligence,[13] and plaintiff's injuries.[14] In an action against a manufacturer, similar instances of injury may be shown as evidence of a probable like occurrence at the time of plaintiff's injury, when accompanied by proof of substantially similar circumstances and reasonable proximity in time.[15] On the other hand, evidence

Defendant is not required to account satisfactorily for the occurrence; he must merely show that he used due care.—Madden v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 162 A. 687, 106 Pa.Super. 474.

What manufacturer must prove
If evidence that substance was in bottled beverage when consumer opened its original seal for consumption was sufficient to cast on manufacturer a presumption of negligence, its duty was to rebut that presumption by showing proper equipment, appliances, and due care on its part both in the process of cleaning, filling, and capping the bottles and in handling them up to the time of delivery to its purchaser.—Dr. Pepper Co. v. Brittain, 176 So. 286, 234 Ala. 548.

Proof of methods and precautions
The presumption is not necessarily rebutted by proof that defendant maintained a modern, sanitary plant, with efficient machinery, and required inspections and other precautions, for the reason, as some cases point out, that there remains the possibility that some employee was negligent in operating the machinery or in permitting the foreign substance to get into the food or in failing to discover its presence.

which falls within the general exclusionary rules of evidence applied in other actions for negligence is inadmissible,[16] as, for example, incompetent or irrelevant evidence relating to similar occurrences.[17] Proof that there had been no other complaints that the product was impure or contaminated has been held inadmissible,[18] but there is authority to the contrary.[19]

Proof that the manufacturer of food violated a pure food law is available in a suit by a retail dealer[20] as well as by a consumer.[21] A showing that defendant's conduct was a violation of a pure food law and so constituted negligence per se does not preclude plaintiff from introducing other evidence of negligence.[22]

c. Weight and Sufficiency

In the absence of inferences or presumptions, every essential fact must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence, and the weight and sufficiency of the evidence to prove particular facts or to support a verdict are determined in accordance with general principles of evidence.

General rules of evidence governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions are applicable in food cases.[23] In addition to presumptions or inferences of negligence arising from the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur or otherwise, other facts required to be proved may be sufficiently established by circumstantial evidence warranting an inference of such facts.[24] However, in the absence of any presumption or infer-

Other food served by restaurant

In action against restaurateur for damages for illness caused by food containing dead insect, testimony of plaintiff's companion that similar articles of food served to him at same time made him sick was held relevant and material.—Franklin v. Argyro, 100 So. 811, 211 Ala. 506.

Injuries in former instances

The court, in action for injuries sustained from drinking bottled beverage containing deleterious substances, may permit evidence of injurious character of foreign substances found in bottles by other persons, but care should be taken by restricting scope of evidence or by express warnings to jury to prevent prejudice to bottling company from emphasis on injuries which jury should not consider in arriving at amount of verdict.—Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Henderson v. ence, every essential fact must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence,[25] or, as some authorities have required, to a reasonable certainty,[26] or sufficiently to satisfy a reasonable, well-balanced mind.[27]

General principles of evidence are determinative of the probative weight or significance of particular evidence in food cases.[28] Accordingly, it has been held that evidence that a consumer swallowed glass is itself evidence of injury,[29] and that evidence of a violation of a pure food law is evidence,[30] or at least some evidence,[31] of negligence per se. The sale of an adulterated article of food by a wholesale dealer is prima facie evidence of negligence, although the package was properly labeled.[32]

The sufficiency of the evidence of defendant's negligence is determined by the facts involved and the general rules of evidence.[33] So, too, the facts of the particular case and the general rules of evidence determine the sufficiency or insufficiency of

Evidence held sufficient

In action for injuries caused by drinking a bottled beverage containing concrete, evidence that concrete was in bottle from which plaintiff drank, that bottle was received by seller in sealed condition from defendant manufacturer, that no third party had an opportunity to tamper with the bottle, and that the cleaning, filling, bottling, and inspection of the beverage sold by defendant to its customers was under the sole control of defendant, warranted jury's conclusion that the concrete was in the bottle when it left defendant's plant.—Coca Cola Bottling Works of Evansville v. Williams, Ind.App., 37 N.E.2d 702.

Evidence insufficient to disprove

In action for injuries sustained by customer who ate ice cream containing glass purchased at soda fountain in defendant's store, evidence that no glass had been broken at fountain for several hours before customer was injured, and that ice cream was being rapidly dispensed at, and just prior to, time of customer's purchase, was insufficient to show that glass did not enter ice cream on defendant's premises.—Ballas v. Evidence sufficient Evidence that maid opened can of lobster and stated in luncheon guest's presence that she did not like smell thereof, whereupon guest ate small piece of lobster, although disliking its taste, and, after eating another small piece, proceeded to make salad and continued to taste lobster four or five times and, after saying that salad should not be used, tasted lobster in another can notwithstanding odor, was held to justify finding of contributory negligence.—Friedman v. The sufficiency of evidence to go to the jury is considered infra § 70.

§ 70. —— Trial

a. In general
b. Province of court and jury
c. Instructions
d. Verdict

a. In General

General rules are applicable in the conduct of the trial. Misconduct by counsel in asking an improper question may be cured by an admonition to the jury to disregard it.

In an action for injuries resulting from defendant's violation of a pure food and drugs act, the act of plaintiff's counsel in asking questions, to show that defendant had been previously prosecuted for violation of such law, if prejudicial misconduct, must be regarded as removed by the court's admonition to the jury thereon.[47]

b. Province of Court and Jury

Questions of law are for the court and questions of fact or mixed law and fact are for the jury. If there is evidence sufficient to justify one of several possible findings or if there is conflicting evidence on an issue, the question is one of fact for the jury, but if there is no evidence on an issue or only such evidence as will permit but a single inference to be drawn therefrom the matter is one for the court to dispose of.

As in other civil actions, questions of law are for the determination of the court, while questions of fact or mixed law and fact are ordinarily to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court.[48] If there is evidence sufficient to justify one of several possible findings, or if there is conflicting evidence on any issue, the question is one of fact that should be submitted to the jury,[49]

and in such case the court may properly refuse to take the question from the jury, as by a nonsuit, dismissal, direction of a verdict, or a peremptory instruction, and it is error for it so to do.[50] On the other hand, if there is no evidence on an issue of fact, or the evidence thereon is legally insufficient to be submitted to the jury or is such that but one inference can reasonably be drawn therefrom, the question becomes one of law for the court itself to determine,[51] and it may dispose of the issue by a dismissal or nonsuit, by sustaining a demurrer to the evidence, or by direction of a verdict, as may be appropriate in the particular case,[52] and it is error to submit the issue to the jury.[53]

Negligence generally. The question of defendant's negligence with respect to an injury or illness caused by unfit food, or its contents, is one of fact and should be submitted to the jury if there is sufficient evidence to warrant a finding, whether or not there is conflicting evidence, that defendant was negligent;[54] and the same rule applies with respect

26 C.J. p 788 note 53.

The test is whether or not circumstances are such as would satisfy a reasonable and well-balanced mind that accident resulted from defendant's negligence.—Quinn v. Swift & Co., D.C.Pa., 20 F.Supp. 234.

Evidence held sufficient

(1) In action against grocery company for negligence in selling hamburg steak containing small pieces of wire, direction of verdict for defendant was held error, under evidence that such wire did not get into steak after leaving the store and testimony of grocery manager that there was no wire in steak when it came into the store, since facts warranted inference of negligence.—Flynn v. First National Stores, 6 N. E.2d 814, 296 Mass. 521.

(2) In action for injury caused by deleterious substances in bottled beverage, testimony of plaintiff that she swallowed portions of one or more bugs which caused her illness, and observed in bottle a brownish gray slimy looking substance, and found in bottle a yellow jacket and cockroach, with testimony of other like instances, was sufficient to take case to jury.—Blackwell v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Asheville, 191 S.E. 887, 211 N.C. 729.

(3) Evidence that customer became ill after eating sausage, that others who ate of sausage also became ill, and that grocer who sold sausage testified that can in which sausage was packed was rusted on inside, presented question for jury as to whether manufacturer was negligent, notwithstanding testimony of manufacturer that samples of sausage taken from can in question were submitted to tests and no trace of poison of any kind was found, and that its methods of manufacturing meats were the most modern and approved methods employed in manufacturing of such foods.—Hollis v. Armour & Co., 2 S.E.2d 681, 190 S.C. 170.

Evidence held insufficient

(1) In action against owner of store by customer to recover for illness allegedly caused by eating allegedly tainted sausage purchased at the store, evidence most favorable to customer that she ate the sausage along with other food and became ill, that she purchased only the sausage from owner of store, that spoiled sausage will sometimes cause such illness as that suffered by her, and that the cheese and milk that she consumed at the same time, if tainted, would cause the same kind of illness, was not sufficient for jury on question of negligence on part of owner of store.—Safeway Stores v. Fuller, 118 P.2d 649, 189 Okl. 556.

(2) Evidence that package of oats, which allegedly contained particles of glass, was unopened by retailer when sold to plaintiff, that retailer had no opportunity to inspect package without breaking seal, and that product was that of reputable manu-

Under doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Where the circumstances are such as to raise a presumption of negligence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, considered supra § 69 a (2), and such presumption is not rebutted or overcome as a matter of law, the issue of negligence is one for the jury,[59] the sufficiency of defendant's rebuttal evidence to overcome the presumption being itself, as a rule, a question for the jury.[60] If there is clear and undisputed evidence sufficient in law to refute the presumption, the issue of negligence may[61] or may not[62] be submitted to the jury, depending on whether the evidence, without the aid of the presumption, is or is not sufficient to raise the issue.

Negligence per se. If there is some evidence tending to establish plaintiff's right to recover on the theory of defendant's negligence per se in violating a pure food law, the issue should be submitted to the jury;[63] but where the evidence is insufficient in law to make out a violation of such a statute, the issue should not be submitted to the jury, and the court may dispose of the issue by a dismissal or nonsuit or a directed verdict.[64]

Contributory negligence. If the evidence is sufficient to warrant a finding that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence or if there is conflicting evidence on such issue, the question is one for the jury.[65] facturer, was held insufficient for jury as regards retailer's liability. —Linker v. Quaker Oats Co., D.C. Okl., 11 F.Supp. 794.

(3) In action to recover for damages allegedly resulting from drinking bottled beverage, evidence that bottle was not uniform in shape, and that it contained a poisonous substance was insufficient to present jury question as to bottler's negligence, in absence of evidence that any other like products manufactured under substantially similar conditions and sold about same time contained deleterious substances, or evidence of defect in machinery or failure to inspect bottled beverages.—Evans v. Charlotte Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co., 6 S.E.2d 510, 216 N.C. 716.

(4) In action against retailer to recover for injuries resulting from the drinking of a bottled beverage allegedly containing dead flies, evidence was insufficient to present jury question as to retailer's negligence where there was nothing in the appearance of bottle which would have put retailer on notice that it was unfit for human consumption.—Wilkes v. Memphis Grocery Co., 134 S.W.2d 929, 23 Tenn.App. 550, rehearing denied Wilkes v. Jones, 139 S. W.2d 416, 24 Tenn.App. 36.

Reasonable time for consumption

In suits against bakers for plaintiffs' illness allegedly caused by eating cream cakes purchased from bakers, bakers' motion for judgment, based on ground that evidence disclosed that cakes were not consumed within a reasonable time after purchase, was properly denied by the trial judge, sitting as a jury, where evidence tended to show that cakes were purchased in the evening and were eaten at eight o'clock the following morning after having been kept overnight in electric refrigerator, since question of what constituted a reasonable time was a fact question for the trial judge.—Amabile v. Kramps, 2 A.2d 178, 121 N.J. Law 219.

Evidence held for jury

(1) Evidence that plaintiff drank half a cup of milk to find out what was wrong with it after her husband and son had complained that something was wrong with tea into which some of the milk had been poured.—

Proximate cause. If there is sufficient evidence to warrant a finding that the unwholesome condition of the food or its contents, or defendant's negligence generally, was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury or illness, or where the evidence on such issue is conflicting, a jury question is presented;[66] but if there is no evidence to warrant such a finding, or if the evidence is such as to permit of but one logical inference, the issue is one of law for the decision of the court.[67]

Company or person liable. Whether or not defendant or a particular defendant manufactured, bottled, packed, sold or served the food which caused the illness or injury is a question for the jury if there is sufficient evidence to support a finding on the question;[68] but if there is no evidence sufficient to support a finding, or if the evidence is so clear as to permit of but one logical inference, the court may and should dispose of the issue as a matter of law.[69]

Dismissal as to one of several defendants

In consumer's action against operators of dairy farm, a dairy company to which operators sold milk, and individual who conducted milk route selling milk purchased from dairy company, for damages sustained from undulant fever contracted by consumer while drinking milk produced and marketed by defendants, dismissal of action as to operators of farm did not require dismissal as to other defendants, where dismissal was on ground that consumer failed to sustain burden of proving that fever was contracted through milk produced by operators because proofs showed that milk obtained by remaining defendants from a third party was also infected.—Nelson v. West Coast Dairy Co., 105 P.2d 76, 5 Wash.2d 284, 130 A.L.R. 606.

Evidence held insufficient

In action for damage from drinking carbonated beverage, evidence, which failed to show that individual who allegedly delivered products from plant of alleged manufacturer to dealer from whom bottle in question was purchased was an employee of alleged manufacturer, or to dispute lease showing that plant was leased by alleged manufacturer to another, or to show that purported advertisement of beverage by manufacturer was authorized or paid for by it, was insufficient for jury on question of manufacturer's liability.—Neely v. Jackson Coca Cola Co., 184 So. 467, 183 Miss. 635.

Weight and credibility. The credibility of witnesses[70] and the weight to be accorded their testimony[71] are matters solely for the determination of the jury.

c. Instructions

Rules governing instructions in civil cases generally, are applicable as to the necessity, propriety and requisites of instructions in food cases.

The rules of law governing instructions in civil cases generally, apply as to the necessity, propriety, and requisites of the instructions in an action for injuries caused by unfit food or food products.[72] Thus instructions must be in conformity with the evidence,[73] and the pleadings,[74] and must not be misleading or confusing.[75] Such rules have been applied to instructions with respect to defendant's duty[76] and liability,[77] the burden[78] and sufficiency[79]

(3) As suggesting that plaintiff's accident alone constituted evidence of proof to make out a case or defense, or to make a prima facie case or justify an inference, proximate cause,[80] negligence per se,[81] and contributory negligence.[82]

Under the rule announced by some authorities that the liability of a manufacturer for placing on the market food unfit for consumption may be based on negligence or on breach of warranty, see supra § 59, and that plaintiff may rely on either or both in bringing action, see supra § 66, it has been held proper to submit the case to the jury on both theories.[83]

d. Verdict

General rules governing verdicts apply in food cases.

The general rules relating to verdicts in civil actions apply to verdicts in food cases.[84]

§ 71. Damages

Damages may be recovered for loss of earnings during illness, pain and suffering, permanent injuries, and death. Punitive damages are not allowable unless defendant's conduct was malicious, reckless, or wanton.

There being no standard fixed by law for measuring the value of human health and happiness, in such cases wide latitude must be allowed for exercise of the jury's judgment, and, unless the amount is so grossly out of all proportion to the injury received as to shock the conscience, the court cannot substitute its judgment for that of the jury.[85] Damages may be recovered not only for suffering endured for a considerable time, and for permanent injuries,[86] but also, in an action based on negligence, for the death of the consumer.[87] Such earnings as the jury find plaintiff would have made and was not able to make because of his sickness may be recovered.[88]

FORCE.

As a Noun

Force has been spoken of as being of various kinds, religious, moral, political, economic, or physical;[1] its meaning in a particular case depending on the circumstances, and so it has sometimes been held to imply the exercise and application of physical power,[2] a physical constraint of the will,[3] and not only actual application of physical force, but such threats or display of physical force as might reasonably be calculated to inspire fear of death or bodily harm;[4] and sometimes not to imply necessarily actual physical combat,[5] the use of actual, active, physical force,[6] violence,[7] or the inflicting of pain or bodily harm or the leaving of a physical mark.[8] The word is ordinarily defined or discussed with reference to its intensity or amount, its direction, its power of application, and the time at which it exists;[9] and it has been variously defined as efficacy, energy, might, momentum, necessity, power, active power, strength, vigor,[10] power statically considered, that is, at rest, or latent, but capable of being called into activity on occasion for its exercise;[11] also power dynamically considered, that is, in motion or in action, hence, with varying shades of meaning, constraining power, compulsion, strength directed to an end;[12] strength applied or exerted;[13] any manipulation or effort employed to overcome any obstruction whatsoever;[14] unlawful violence;[15] unlawful violence offered to persons or things;[16] unlawful violence which may be implied, as in every trespass;[17] and it has been said that the definition nearest to the exact meaning of the word is violence, power exerted against will or consent.[18]

In other senses, or applications, the word may mean validity, virtue,[19] or legal validity;[20] also armament;[21] and, in the plural, the military and naval power of a country.[22]

In old English law, it was applied, as a technical term, to a species of accessory before the fact.[23]

In the accompanying notes some examples are given of what, in particular connections, the term has been held to include,[24] and not to include.[25]

Depending on the circumstances, "force" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "coercion"[26] "vi et armis,"[27] and "violence;"[28] and has been compared with, or distinguished from, "artifice" see 6 C.J.S. p 777 note 66, "coercion" see 14 C.J.S. p 1307 notes 49–52, "fraud" see the C.J.S. title Fraud § 1, also 26 C.J. p 1060 note 16, "intimidation,"[29] and "violence."[30]

For references to specific uses of the word in particular legal connections see 26 C.J. p 794 note 1.

By force. Forcibly, violently.[31] In some connections, the word has been held equivalent to "violently" and "violently . . . against her will;"[32] but in others it has been said not to be interchangeable with "violently."[33]

Force majeure, fuerza mayor, and vis major. Three terms, respectively French, Spanish, and Latin which are practically equivalent and which are used in the civil law for irresistible or superior force, corresponding in a general way to the "Act of God" of the common law,[34] although sometimes distinguished from "Act of God" see 1 C.J.S. p 1431 notes 17, 19, 27; and specifically defined as an accident produced by physical cause which is irresistible;[35] a fact or accident which human prudence can neither forsee nor prevent;[36] a fortuitous event;[37] inevitable accident or casualty;[38] irresistible force, overpowering force, or unforeseen event.[39]

In force. Being in existence; having the force of the law.[40] When used with reference to particular contracts the phrase implies the performance of conditions precedent;[41] and with reference to a statute it implies, or presupposes, that the law was duly adopted.[42]

Irresistible force. Such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable.[43] It has been held equivalent to "cas fortuit" see 13 C.J.S. p 1768 note 15, and "casus fortuitus" see 14 C.J.S. p 32 note 18.

Superior force. Accidental or uncontrollable events, force majeure, or an accident which human prudence can neither foresee nor prevent;[44] vis major.[45]

Other phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[46]

As a Verb

To do violence to, especially to violate or to ravish; also to constrain or compel by physical, moral or intellectual means, to coerce; also to break open, as a gate or lock.[47]

In particular applications, the term has been held a synonym of "ravish,"[48] and the antithesis of "decoy" see 26 C.J.S. p 42 note 74.

"Forced," in the past tense, may be the equivalent of "compelled" see 15 C.J.S. p 650 note 46.

"Forcing," the present participle, used as a building term referring to the process by which plaster is applied to concrete and masonry walls and ceilings, is broad enough to cover a variety of methods of forcing in gravel, sand, or other key material commonly used, including air blasting.[49] Used in another sense, the term refers to forcing or breaking open buildings and other depositories, in order to steal therefrom.[50]

Forced sale. A sale which is made under the process of the court and in the mode prescribed by law.[51] The term has also been applied to the sale by a buyer under particular circumstances in order to prevent or reduce loss resulting from breach of contract by the seller.[52] Examples of transactions which, under particular circumstances, have been held not to constitute forced sales are set out in the note.[53]

1. DEFINITIONS AND DISTINCTIONS

§ 1. Definitions

A forcible entry or detainer generally consists in violently taking or keeping possession of lands or tenements, by means of threats, force, or arms, and without authority of law.

While the nature and elements of the civil action of forcible entry and detainer are usually prescribed by the statute setting up the cause of action, a forcible entry or detainer generally consists in violently taking or keeping possession of lands or tenements, by means of threats, force, or arms, and without authority of law.[1] As appears infra § 2, a distinction is often drawn between forcible entry and detainer, forcible detainer, and unlawful detainer.

§ 2. Distinctions

Forcible entry and forcible detainer are distinguishable in that the former is based on an entry upon another's possession by force or violence, whereas the latter is based upon an unlawful forcible detention after an entry without force. Unlawful detainer is distinguishable from forcible detainer with respect to the element of force in the detention.

Forcible entry and detainer is a separate offense or ground of liability and the remedy therefor is distinguishable from statutory writ of entry, see Entry, Writ of § 3 b; from common law ejectment, see Actions § 36 g; from statutory ejectment, see Ejectment § 3; and from trespass, see Actions § 36 i.

While the term "forcible entry and detainer" is often comprehensively used, it is recognized under many statutes that its components, "forcible entry" and "forcible detainer", are separate and distinct wrongs.[2] The action or offense of forcible entry is generally based on an entry upon another's possession by force or violence,[3] whereas the gist of the action of forcible detainer is the unlawful detention of property with force and a strong hand, following on an entry which is lawful,[4] or which is wrongful or unlawful, but without force.[5]

"Unlawful detainer" is a separate, distinct offense under various statutes, and is distinguishable from forcible detainer in that no element of force is required in the former.[6] Unlawful detainer is usually confined to cases where there has been an entry under some contractual relationship.[7]

Distinction based on lawfulness of entry

It has been said that the two offenses of forcible entry and detainer, and forcible detainer, are distinguishable depending on the lawfulness or unlawfulness of the entry; whenever the entry is unlawful, whether forcible or not, and the subsequent conduct is forcible and tortious, the offense committed is a forcible entry and detainer, but wherever the original entry is lawful, and the subsequent holding forcible and tortious, then the offense is an unlawful detainer only.

Definitions

(1) Unlawful detainer is the unjustifiable retention of the possession of lands by one whose original entry was lawful and of right, but whose right to the possession has terminated and who refuses to quit, as in the case of a tenant holding over after the termination of the lease and in spite of a demand for possession by the landlord.—Correa v. Correa, 32 Puerto Rico 254.

(2) "Unlawful detainer is where the defendant enters by contract, either as a tenant or as assignee of a tenant, or as personal representative of a tenant, or as subtenant, or by collusion with a tenant, and in either case, willfully and without force, holds over the possession from the landlord, or the assignee of the remainder or reversion."—Shepperson v. II. CIVIL LIABILITY

A. NATURE AND ELEMENTS AND PROPERTY SUBJECT OF ACTION

§ 3. In General

Forcible entry and detainer is a summary statutory proceeding, strictly possessory in nature, providing a remedy for the protection of the actual possession of realty against forcible invasion, in cases coming fairly within the terms of the statute; the remedy is merely cumulative of any other remedy that a party may have.

Forcible entry and detainer as a civil proceeding is based on, and has by modern legislation been evolved from, the English forcible entry and detainer which was a criminal proceeding merely.[8] The remedy is purely statutory[9] and is summary in character;[10] and, while not a common-law action,[11] it is an action at law relating to real property[12] sounding in tort.[13]

While the scope and extent of the remedy varies under different statutes, generally speaking, forcible entry and detainer is a remedy for the protection of the actual possession of realty, whether rightful or wrongful, against forcible invasion, its objects being to prevent disturbances of the public peace, and to forbid any person righting himself by his own hand and by violence.[14] The action is strictly possessory in its nature,[15] so that ordinarily the immediate right to possession is all that is involved or can be determined.[16] If defendant wishes to enforce his title or his legal right to possession he must resort to the proper action at law for this purpose, see infra §§ 6, 7.

A forcible entry and detainer proceeding is not exclusive, but is cumulative of any other remedy that a party may have.[17] So the action does not supersede any available common-law remedy.[18]

A right of action for forcible entry and detainer exists only where the acts complained of come within the terms of the applicable statute.[19] Broadly speaking, the elements of the action, warranting recovery of possession, are plaintiff's prior possession of the property, see infra § 8, and an intrusion by defendant on such possession either forcibly or by threats, or peaceably without plaintiff's permission or consent.[20] The motive[21] or the good or bad faith of defendant in making the entry does not affect his liability and is not to be inquired into.[22]

As a rule, no particular contractual relation need exist to authorize restoration of the party entitled to possession.[23] Accordingly, unless the statute so provides, it is not limited to cases where the relation of landlord and tenant exists.[24]

"The general purpose of the statutes relating to forcible entry and detainer, both in England and in this country, is that, regardless of the actual condition of the title to the property, the party in actual, peaceable, and quiet possession shall not be turned out by strong hand, violences, or terror. One who becomes guilty of a forcible entry, therefore, or of a forcible detainer after a peacable but unlawful entry, was not only made subject to indictment, but was required to restore possession to the party from whom the property was so taken or detained, and in a proper case to pay damages, notwithstanding the entrant may have had the admittedly superior title, or the better right to possession taken."—Hewitt v. § 4. Statutory Provisions

Authorities are divided as to whether the statutes governing forcible entry and detainer are to be strictly construed or liberally construed. The legislative intent is controlling with respect to the amendment or repeal of such statutes, but in any case the law in force at the time of the commencement of the action governs.

According to some decisions, forcible entry and detainer statutes are highly penal in character, and in derogation of the common-law, and recoveries under them should be confined to cases strictly within their provisions.[25] It has been held, on the other hand, that proceedings under such statutes are remedial in character, and that, in order to render effectual the remedy provided, they should be liberally construed.[26]

The terms of a statute as to forcible entry and detainer will not be considered affected, repealed, or amended by other statutory provisions unless it directly appears that such is the legislative intent.[27]

By what law governed. The law in force at the time of the commencement of actions of the character under consideration, rather than that at the time of the entry, governs.[28]

§ 5. Right of Entry to Take Possession without Action

The fact that a party has title to realty and is entitled to immediate possession does not justify him in making a forcible entry to acquire such possession; but an owner has the right to make an entry in a peaceable, open manner.

Although one may have the title to realty and be justly entitled to the immediate possession thereof, yet if he enters by violence on the actual peaceable possession of another who has no title or right whatever, he is liable to an action of forcible entry and detainer.[29] The constructive possession which follows the title does not justify the owner in making a forcible entry.[30] On the other hand, the forcible entry and detainer statutes do not deprive an owner or one who bona fide claims title of the right of entry on to his land if effected in a peaceable, open manner.[31]

§ 6. Title

As a general rule, title to property is not involved and cannot be inquired into in actions of forcible entry and detainer, except as an incident tending to show the right of possession where such right is involved.

Except in the very few instances in which there is special statutory authority for adjudicating title,[32] title to the premises is not involved and cannot be inquired into in actions of forcible entry and detainer,[33] or in an action for unlawful detainer;[34] and the secret equities between the parties are not matters for investigation.[35] If defendant has any title to the land it must be tried in some action proper for trying such questions.[36] So the fact that the title to the premises involved is in the government instead of in an individual does not affect the right to maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer.[37]

Element of remedy
Under some statutes, the question of title must be tried when controverted as a necessary element of the remedy of unlawful detainer.—

In any event, title may be inquired into only as an incident tending to show the right to possession,[38] where the right to possession under a particular statute may be involved, see infra § 7.

§ 7. Right to Possession

As a general rule, the legal right to possession of the premises sought to be recovered is not involved in a forcible entry and detainer action, it being sufficient for plaintiff to establish actual peaceable possession at the time of the entry; but the right to possession may be inquired into incidentally or directly under some statutes.

rule stated supra § 6 that title to the premises is not involved in actions for forcible entry and detainer, the general rule also is that the right to possession of the premises is not involved,[39] that is, the legal right to possession as distinguished from plaintiff's present right of possession based on his prior actual possession of which he is deprived;[40] and it is sufficient for plaintiff merely to establish actual peaceable possession at the time of the forcible entry or detainer complained of.[41] If defendant wishes to enforce his legal right to possession he must resort to the proper action at law to do so.[42]

However, the right to possession, as well as the title, may be inquired into incidentally under the provisions of some of the statutes as to forcible entry and detainer, and kindred actions,[43] and especially under statutes which make right to possession an element of protection of the particular statute.[44] So, where the action is not for a forcible entry and detainer, but for an unlawful detention of the premises after a lawful or peaceable entry, it is held that only one who shows that he is entitled to possession at the commencement of the action may recover such possession.[45] Under the express terms of some statutes, only persons "entitled to the premises,"[46] or persons having "right to possession,"[47] or persons "lawfully entitled to possession"[48] may fall within the protection of the statutes.

§ 8. Plaintiff's Prior Possession

The right to maintain an action for forcible entry and detainer on the basis of actual possession in plaintiff at the time of the entry or detainer irrespective of the legal right to possession is considered supra § 7. Basis of right of action

The right to maintain action for unlawful detention of real property is not determined by plaintiff's right of possession, but by whether he has been in possession and such possession has been taken from him by force, or, having been obtained from him peaceably, is unlawfully withheld.

(1) The "right to possession" is a right ordinarily resting on title, while that "right of possession" which is the basis of the action of forcible entry and detainer is the right of a person in possession not to be forcibly dispossessed, although he may have obtained or retained possession by force.—Cahill v. Pine Creek Oil Co., 130 P. 64, 38 Okl. 568.

§ 9. —— Necessity

Unless otherwise provided by the statute, only one who was in possession at the time of the wrongful entry and detainer may maintain an action to recover such possession.

As appears supra § 3, an action of forcible entry and detainer is strictly possessory in its nature, and, as a general rule, only one who was in peaceful and exclusive possession of the premises in controversy at the time of the acts complained of can maintain an action to recover possession.[49] Such possession need only exist prior to the inception of the wrongful possession by defendant, that is, prior to the beginning of the unlawful entry and detainer.[50]

On the other hand, under the express provisions of some statutes, one unlawfully deprived of possession of property to which he is entitled may maintain an action for the recovery thereof regardless whether he was theretofore in possession or not.[51] Accordingly, where a statute so provides, a person entitled to possession of property may be restored thereto when without right or title entry has been made by another into vacant or unoccupied lands or tenements.[52]

§ 10. —— Character of Possession in General

As a rule, it is essential that plaintiff's prior possession should have been actual, peaceable, exclusive, adverse, and continuous; but each case rests on its own facts in determining what constitutes possession.

Every action for forcible entry and detainer rests on its own facts in determining what constitutes possession by plaintiff.[53] As a rule, however, it is essential that plaintiff's prior possession should have been actual, see infra § 11, peaceable,[54] exclusive,[55] adverse,[56] and continuous[57] in the sense that it must not be an interrupted or scrambling possession, see infra § 13, although it is usually not essential that the possession should have lasted for any definite period of time.[58] Under some statutes, however, possession for a specified period of time is sufficient and necessary to sustain the action,[59] and these statutes do not conflict with the federal statutes relating to homestead entries.[60]

Ordinarily, the manner in which plaintiff obtained possession of which he has been forcibly ousted is immaterial;[61] but it has been held that possession obtained by fraud or by stealth cannot be made the predicate of an action of forcible entry and de-tainer.[62] Acts which contemplate a purely prospective possession are insufficient to support a recovery.[63]

§ 11. —— Actual Possession

a. In general
b. What constitutes actual possession

a. In General

Recovery for forcible entry and detainer may be had only where actual possession by plaintiff has been interfered with.

It is only an actual possession that has been interfered with that may be restored by an action for forcible entry and detainer.[64] A mere semblance of possession,[65] or mere constructive possession such as the law in many cases imputes to the owner of the legal title,[66] is not sufficient. Such actual possession is sufficient and necessary as would, if continued for the necessary period, vest title in plaintiff.[67]

b. What Constitutes Actual Possession

Generally, actual possession consists in exercising acts of dominion over the land in dispute and in using it, and the effect of particular acts varies with the situation of the parties, the character of the land, and the purpose to which it is adapted.

Generally speaking the actual possession which is sufficient consists in exercising acts of dominion over the land in dispute and in making the ordinary use of it, and it may consist in, and be shown by, a great number and combination of acts, the character of which must necessarily vary with the situation of the parties, the character of the land, and the purpose to which it is adapted.[68]

Inclosure. A sufficient inclosure is of itself a sufficient means of taking and holding actual possession of land without residence, cultivation, or other acts of dominion over it.[69] However, there may be actual possession where a person incloses land partly by fences and partly by the use of natural barriers.[70] Moreover, there may be an actual possession without fences or inclosures of any kind,[71] although in such cases it must appear that plaintiff has exercised exclusive dominion and control over that portion of land of which defendant took possession.[72]

Cultivation. A substantial cultivation of the land

"The person who seeks to avail himself of this remedy must have actual possession of the premises, it must be something more than a mere mental state. It must be of such a character that the law will frown down upon anyone interfering with the possession for the reason that such interference would tend to create a breach of the peace."—Heron v. Ramsey, 117 P.2d 247, 250, 45 N.M. 491.

Trespasser
If one is actually in possession of land, the fact that a prior trespasser gets possession does not render the entry of a subsequent trespasser any the less a forcible and wrongful entry as to the first party named, and he may maintain his writ of forcible entry against the latter, equally as against the first trespasser.—Alexander v. Use and dominion
"In order to take possession of land there must be some immediate use made of it. The use and dominion over the land should be such as the land will warrant. Merely walking on the land and posting a sign for others to keep off, or merely cutting some posts on the land do not . . . constitute possession."—Heron v. Ramsey, 117 P.2d 247, 250, 45 N.M. 491.

Doors open and unlocked
Possession of a house, by plaintiff in forcible entry and detainer, was not prevented by the fact that doors were left open and unlocked.—Washington v. Spriggs, 105 So. 811, 213 Ala. 622.

Locating mining claim
One who locates part of a public domain as a claim by monumenting it and causes notice of location to be recorded under the Mining Law and does proper assessment work yearly has actual possession within the rule as against a squatter thereon, although he had never been personally on the claim.—Foster v. Possession not shown Where plaintiff went on unfenced grazing land and, for his own purposes, located one boundary line thereof, and plaintiff later returned to land and posted "No Trespass" signs and sent his employees on land to cut fence posts, plaintiff did not have such "possession" as would authorize him to maintain a forcible entry and detainer action against defendant who subsequently went on land and put livestock thereon.—Heron v. Ramsey, 117 P.2d 247, 45 N.M. 491.

in controversy,[73] especially where there are other acts denoting ownership,[74] such as fencing the premises,[75] or fencing the premises and building a stable thereon, constitutes actual possession;[76] but mere entry on the land and plowing a few furrows across a portion of it does not make out such a case of actual possession on his part as to warrant a verdict in his favor.[77]

Taking natural products of land. A mere entry on land and cutting timber thereon does not of itself constitute actual possession,[78] especially where the cutting of timber is at widely separated intervals of time[79] or where the whole tract on a part of which the entry was made is within the boundaries of defendant's deed and part of it in the actual possession of defendant and his tenants;[80] but in connection with other circumstances it may form a very material link in the chain of evidence to establish actual possession.[81]

The grazing of stock over uninclosed lands has been held not such possession of any specific portion of the lands in the owner of the stock as will enable him to maintain forcible entry and detainer;[82] but the use of land for pasturing and ranging live stock taken in connection with other acts may constitute sufficient possession on which to base the action, as where the land used for pasture is inclosed,[83] or where in addition to pasturing the stock on the premises the owner of the stock locks the doors of the house thereon and closes the windows.[84]

Payment of taxes. Payment of taxes on the land does not constitute actual possession of it;[85] but the requirements as to possession are satisfied where in addition to payment of taxes the party paying them had a deed for the land and continuously cut timber on it for a period of twenty years.[86]

Actual occupancy or personal presence. Mere occupancy or personal presence on the premises in dispute is not sufficient to constitute the requisite possession.[87] On the other hand actual pedis possessio or residence on the premises at the time of the entry complained of is not essential.[88] The owner is not bound to be continually on his land either in person or by agent, or to station his servants there to keep intruders away.[89]

The possession to which the summary remedy applies is not confined to the pedis possessio or actual inclosure of the occupant.[90] It applies to any possession which is sufficient to sustain an action of trespass,[91] and may apply in a case where trespass will not lie, as against the owner of land who may defend against an action of trespass by the plea of liberum tenementum.[92] An entry, coupled with such acts of open and visible ownership as clearly indicate his intention to take and hold permanent possession under claim of right to exclusive possession, will be sufficient to enable him to maintain this form of action to repel an unlawful intrusion.[93]

Possession of part under claim to whole tract. One who is in possession of part of a tract of land under claim and color of title to the whole is by intendment of law in possession of the whole tract lying within the boundaries of his colorable title, or at least of so much as is not in the adverse possession of others; and such possession will entitle him to maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer against one who makes a forcible entry on any part of the tract not adversely held by others.[94] Also this possession is sufficient to authorize an action of forcible detainer.[95] However, actual possession of an inclosed contiguous tract is not constructive possession of an unfenced tract acquired under another grant.[96] Also, where the occupant is a mere disseizor, his possession for the purposes of this action must be confined to the land actually occupied.[97]

§ 12. —— Peaceable Possession without Right

Unless otherwise provided by statute, a bare possession without right, if unlawfully invaded by force, will be protected and restored.

Except under some statutes restricting recovery for forcible entry and detainer to one having the legal right to possession,[98] it is generally held that even a bare possession without right, if unlawfully invaded by force, will be protected and restored.[99] Indeed, recovery may be had even against the owner or lessee of the premises who is legally entitled to possession, if plaintiff was in actual possession at the time of the forcible ouster,[1] and it is no defense that his own possession originated in a trespass.[2] Any peaceable possession is a legal possession as against a wrongdoer who forcibly ejects the occupant.[3]

§ 13. —— Scrambling or Interrupted Possession

A mere scrambling or interrupted possession is insufficient to warrant recovery for forcible entry and detainer.

As appears supra §§ 10, 11, plaintiff's prior possession must have been actual, peaceable, and exclusive; the action for forcible entry and detainer cannot be maintained on a mere scrambling or interrupted possession.[4] Where one in the peaceable possession of premises is forcibly ousted therefrom and subsequently himself forcibly regains possession, the person who had ousted him cannot treat the temporary possession he had himself gained by force as lawful, and on that ground maintain an action for forcible entry on himself.[5]

§ 14. —— Possession by Agent or Servant

Generally, one in possession by an agent or servant has sufficient possession to warrant recovery for forcible entry and detainer.

As a general rule, one in possession of property by an agent or servant may maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer in his own name.[6] The actual personal presence of the employer is not required to constitute possession in him; and the employee's possession is that of the employer.[7] It has been held, however, that a person whose occupancy of land is through his servants and who has never been in possession cannot maintain an action under a statute providing for recovery of property from one who unlawfully detains it after entering during the absence of the "occupant."[8] One in actual possession of land is in no way affected in his rights by the guilty acts of an employee in possession in selling the improvements on the land.[9]

Under a statute providing that an entry without the consent of the person having actual possession shall be considered a forcible entry, such actual possession must be capable of bearing a presumption of right in the possessor, and one who unlawfully takes possession cannot recover as against the person formerly in possession who has retaken it.—Benevides v. where plaintiff, before the entry complained of, abandoned possession of the property in question with the intention of not returning thereto.

The possession necessary to entitle one to recover for forcible entry and detainer does not exist where plaintiff voluntarily abandoned the possession of the premises in controversy before the entry complained of.[10] This, however, is a question of intention and not a question of time, except as far as the jury are entitled to consider lapse of time in connection with all the other facts and circumstances tending to show claim or nonclaim on the part of plaintiff.[11] It must be made to appear that he relinquished possession without any intention of returning or making further use of the premises.[12]

§ 16. Force on Part of Defendant

Intrusion on plaintiff's possession as an element of forcible entry and detainer is considered supra § 3. The necessity that the entry or detainer be forcible and the sufficiency of particular acts to constitute force are considered infra §§ 17–19.

§ 17. —— Necessity

a. In general
b. Exceptions to rule

a. In General

As a general rule, actual or threatened force by defendant is essential to support an action for forcible entry and detainer or an action of forcible detainer.

Except when otherwise provided by statute, force, either actually applied or justly to be feared from the conduct of defendant, is essential to support an action for forcible entry and detainer,[13] or an action of forcible detainer.[14] Accordingly, if a person entitled to possession enters peaceably, he is not liable to an action of forcible entry and detainer,[15] and, having gained possession peaceably, he may resist forcibly an attempt by the former occupant to retake possession.[16] Where, however, one peaceably enters on premises, but, through force, fear of personal violence, or threats, keeps one entitled to possession out of it, the former is subject to an action for forcible detainer.[17]

b. Exceptions to Rule

Where so provided by statute, the general rule as to the necessity of force by defendant as an element of forcible entry and detainer does not apply.

In some jurisdictions there are exceptions to the general rule stated supra subdivision a of this section as to the force necessary to maintain actions of this character.

Entry against will of occupant. In some jurisdictions the rule is that to maintain forcible entry and detainer it is not necessary that actual force or violence be used in taking possession of the premises, but that any entry which is against the will or consent of the occupant is a forcible entry;[18] and to constitute a forcible entry it is not necessary that the entry should have been against the "expressed will" of the party in possession.[19] It has been held, however, that, where statutes of this character are in force, to constitute a forcible detainer there must be an actual force with a strong hand except where the parties stand in certain relationships.[20]

Entry by fraud, strategy, or stealth. In some jurisdictions the action of forcible entry and detainer may be maintained when defendant has entered on the possession of another by fraud or stealth as well as by force or intimidation.[21]

Turning out or withholding. Under some statutes an action of forcible entry and detainer or forcible detainer may be brought against one who, after entering peaceably on the premises, by unlawful refusal[22] or by force, threats, or menacing conduct,[23] turns plaintiff out of possession or keeps him out of possession.[24]

So, under the particular statute it may be sufficient to sustain the charge of forcible detainer that the person unlawfully in possession refused to vacate the premises on lawful notice so to do.[25]

Entry peaceable but unlawful. If an entry on land, although peaceable, is unlawful, the particular statute may authorize the owner to recover possession in an action of unlawful entry and detainer.[26]

An unlawful entry during the absence of the occupant and a refusal to surrender the same on demand may under the particular statute constitute a forcible detainer and authorize a recovery without proof that the entry was in fact forcible.[27] It is sometimes provided that any person who enters on a mining claim, in the temporary absence of those in possession of the claim, is liable to an action of forcible entry and detainer.[28]

§ 18. —— Sufficiency

To render an entry forcible, it must be accompanied either by actual violence or by circumstances tending to excite terror in the person in possession and prevent him from maintaining his rights; but the acts done need not constitute an assault and battery or a breach of the peace.

As a general rule, to render an entry forcible it must be accompanied either by actual violence, or by circumstances tending to excite terror in the owner or other persons in possession, and to prevent them from maintaining their rights. There must be at least apparent violence or some unusual weapons, or the attendance of an unusual number of people, some menaces or other acts giving reasonable cause to fear that the person making the forcible entry will do some bodily harm to those in possession, if they do not give up the same.[29] An entry merely against the will of the occupant is not forcible.[30] However, it is not necessary that the intruder should do such acts as would constitute an assault and battery.[31] The same circumstances of force or violence that amount to a forcible entry will also amount to a forcible detainer.[32]

Mere trespass insufficient. As a rule, something more than a mere trespass on the premises of plaintiff is necessary to support an action under the statutes relating to forcible entry and detainer;[33] but it has been held that an action for unlawful de-tainer is a proper remedy for a continuing trespass.[34]

Threats and appearance of violence. When a person entering on the land of another by his behavior or speech gives those who are in possession just reason to think that he intends to take possession by force if they do not give way to him, his entry is to be deemed forcible, whether he causes the apprehension of the use of violence by taking with him an unusual number of attendants or by arming himself in such a manner as plainly to indicate a design to back his pretentions by force, or by actually threatening to kill, maim, or beat those who continue in possession, or by making use of expressions plainly implying a purpose of using force against those who make resistance.[35] It is against an entry under terrorizing conditions that the statute is aimed.[36]

Breaking into house. Breaking into a dwelling house occupied by a person or a family, being in itself calculated to inspire terror or the fear of personal violence, constitutes a forcible entry and detainer,[37] but, in the absence of special statutory provision, it is held that one who breaks and enters into a dwelling house from which the occupant is absent leaving no one in charge is not liable to such action,[38] and that the action does not lie where the building broken and entered in the absence of the occupant is not a dwelling but a mere outhouse.[39] Under some statutes, however, breaking and entering a dwelling house from which the occupant is absent leaving no one in charge will sustain an action of forcible entry and detainer;[40] and it has been held that, where plaintiff had land inclosed by wire fence and defendant took it away and erected an iron fence around the land, this would constitute a forcible entry within a statute providing that the force used may be "breaking open a door, window, or other part of a house."[41]

Entering without breaking. Generally, entering by the ordinary means of entrance without any breaking in or any threat of violence to the person does not amount to a forcible entry,[42] such as an entry into a close by the mere opening of a gate,[43] or an entry into a house by the use of a key[44] or by drawing a latch.[45]

Breach of peace. An entry made with such force or under such circumstances as tend to produce a breach of the pace will of course support this action.[46] On the other hand, it is not necessary to constitute a forcible entry that there be proof of such acts of violence as amount to a breach of the peace,[47] although there is some authority to the contrary.[48] So, it is not necessary that the occupant should resist until he compels the doing of an overt act in breach of the peace;[49] and it will be sufficient if the actual possession of another is invaded, taken, and held under circumstances to show that it will not be surrendered without a breach of the peace on the one side or the other.[50]

§ 19. —— Entry by Legal Authority

An action for forcible entry and detainer may not be maintained against one who enters by virtue of legal authority; but, if the writ by which plaintiff was dispossessed was wrongfully issued or void, or did not run against plaintiff or the property in question, he may maintain such action.

The entry for which the law affords a redress is an entry by a person of his own wrong and by his own mere act without authority of law, and therefore this action cannot be maintained when one is put in possession by an officer of the law under and by the command of a court of competent jurisdiction,[51] although in so doing he turned out one whom he could not lawfully dispossess by virtue of his writ.[52] This, it is said, does not constitute a forcible entry and detainer within either the letter or spirit of the law;[53] neither is the officer guilty of forcible entry if he acts in good faith under a writ of restitution.[54]

On the other hand, if the writ is wrongfully issued,[55] or void,[56] one who enters under it is a mere intruder or trespasser from whom recovery of possession may be obtained. In order to justify an entry under authority of a writ, the party claiming its protection must show a judgment as well as an execution.[57]

Although there is authority to the contrary,[58] it is held that, if a person is dispossessed under and by virtue of a writ of possession issued on a judgment to which he is neither a party,[59] nor a privy,[60] or under a writ of restitution for different premises,[61] or where one is put in possession under a writ of possession against the execution of which an injunction has been granted,[62] the party thus unlawfully dispossessed may maintain forcible entry and detainer to regain possession.

Public force of the state lawfully exercised as a means of recovering its own property does not constitute a forcible entry.[63]

§ 20. Property as to Which Action Lies

Ordinarily forcible entry and detainer lies only for the recovery of real property and not for the recovery of personalty.

Forcible entry and detainer cannot be maintained for the recovery of personalty, but it is maintainable only when the possession of real property is sought in the absence of statute otherwise providing.[64] Some of the statutes make express provision for the recovery of tenements as well as of lands.[65]

Easements

A statute which prohibits the forcible entry on lands and tenements is broad enough to protect an easement.—Vance v. Ferguson, 85 S.E. 241, 101 S.C. 125.

Land

It has been held that "tenement," as used in a statute providing for an action by landlord against a tenant to recover possession of a "house or tenement," is used in a comprehensive sense and signifies land as well as a house or building.—Sacket v. Wheaton, 17 Pick., Mass., 103.

Leasehold

Statute giving a right of action when lands or tenements have been conveyed by any grantor in possession, or sold under a judgment or decree or by virtue of a power contained in any mortgage or trust deed, and possession is withheld after written demand, did not apply where a leasehold was sold under the power of a chattel mortgage and the purchaser brought forcible detainer.—Vinje v. Pagels, 222 Ill.App. 310.

g. Purchasers or assignees
h. Successful claimant of homestead entry
i. Tenants in common

a. In General

Forcible entry and detainer may be maintained only by the person or persons entitled to the immediate possession of the premises.

As shown supra § 3, generally speaking, forcible entry and detainer may be maintained by him whose peaceable and exclusive possession of the premises in controversy has been forcibly disturbed. However, it can only be maintained by the person or persons entitled to the immediate possession of the premises.[66] It cannot be maintained by one person to the use of another,[67] but should be brought by the real party in interest.[68] One who has acquired possession has no right thereafter to bring an action for a prior forcible entry and detainer.[69] Where the parties by whom an action may be maintained are specifically enumerated by statute, the action can be maintained only by those so enumerated.[70]

A judgment creditor who has complied with a statute authorizing a redemption of land from a mortgage foreclosure sale may maintain an action of unlawful detainer.[71]

Grantor who has agreed to put grantee in possession. Forcible detainer proceedings may be maintained, after plaintiff had delivered a deed to the premises, which had not yet been recorded, and in which he agreed to put the grantee in possession of the property.[72]

Owner of the reversion cannot after the death of the tenant by the curtesy maintain unlawful detainer against his lessee, there being no privity between them.[73]

Trespasser. A mere trespasser on land cannot maintain this action, although he may have been forcibly removed from the premises.[74]

Municipal corporations. Where a municipal corporation owns land of which it is in possession, it may maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer against anyone who unlawfully intrudes thereon.[75]

b. Heirs, Devisees, and Personal Representatives

Heirs and devisees usually may maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer for land, possession of which the decedent was entitled to, and the personal representative may bring the action if he is entitled to possession.

In the absence of statute otherwise providing, where the possession of the ancestor was such that he might have maintained forcible entry and detainer, the action may be maintained by the heirs, for the title and right of the ancestor at once descend to and vest in them.[76] Further, it has been held that an heir may maintain a warrant of forcible detainer against the tenant of his ancestor, who holds over without first reducing the premises to actual possession.[77] The heirs have, however, no greater right than the ancestor, if living, would have had.[78]

One holding chattel mortgage on crops and pasture, who left the assignee of the unassignable lease in possession and care of the premises, was not an occupant entitled to maintain action in unlawful detainer, under Remington Comp.St. § 811, permitting such action to the occupant against every one entering at nighttime or during the occupant's absence and refusing to surrender the premises for three days, and defining "occupant" as one who for five days next preceding was in peaceable and undisturbed possession.—Wynn v. Vessey, 221 P. 295, 127 Wash. 492.

A deceased ranch owner's brother who held ranch in trust for owner and after his death for his administrator could not maintain unlawful detainer action against lessee in possession under owner and administrator.—Costa v. Neves, 82 P.2d 600, 12 Cal.2d 121.

Personal representative. By statute in some jurisdictions the personal representative may maintain the action where the right to possession and control of decedent's real estate passes to him as an incident of administration,[81] but it has been held that he cannot maintain the action without statutory authority therefor.[82]

c. Landlord and Tenant

A tenant in possession of land is the proper person, rather than the landlord, to maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer for wrongful entry on the premises.

Since the action of forcible entry and detainer is for the benefit of him whose possession is invaded, where a wrongful entry has been made on the premises in the possession of a tenant, he and not his landlord is the proper person to institute and maintain the action.[83] Even though the term of the tenant has expired and he has left the premises, the landlord cannot maintain a forcible entry and detainer, if the entry complained of was made during the tenant's term,[84] unless otherwise provided by statute,[85] or unless, it has been held, there are special circumstances which would render the enforcement of the rule inequitable.[86] A mere tenant at will may maintain the action.[87]

Lessee never in possession. Under the rule which prevents one who has never had prior possession from maintaining forcible entry and detainer, see supra § 9, it is usually held that a lessee who has never been in possession of the premises cannot maintain the action,[88] and that a landlord who has executed leases to third persons giving them the right of possession is nevertheless the proper and only party to bring action to recover possession from a former tenant who refuses to deliver up the premises.[89] Where prior possession is not essential as a basis for actions of this character, it has been held that the landlord is not entitled to maintain an action under these circumstances,[90] and the lessee may maintain the action against one holding over after the cancellation of his contract for the sale of the land[91] and against a tenant remaining in possession after the expiration of his lease.[92]

On abandonment or expiration of the tenancy possession revests in the landlord, and it has been held that he may maintain an action of unlawful detainer against one to whom the tenant on abandonment wrongfully delivered the possession,[93] or an action of forcible entry and detainer against an intruder on the premises after the termination of the lease and after the tenant had vacated the premises without making a formal reëntry,[94] or an action of forcible entry and detainer against one who, after the expiration of the tenancy but before the tenant had moved, went on the land without objection from the tenants and claimed title superior to that of the landlord.[95]

Where an officer serving a writ of possession had succeeded only in placing the tenant's goods on the land and was about to eject the tenant when the sheriff arrived with an injunction staying the execution of the writ, and the tenant thereupon took up his abode in an outbuilding on the premises, such writ of possession was not executed before the service of the injunction, so as to deprive the tenant of possession and thereby deprive him of his right to maintain forcible entry and detainer against plaintiff in the writ of restitution.[96]

d. Licensees and Servants

A mere licensee usually may not maintain an action for forcible entry and detainer, although the possession of an agent or servant may be such as to authorize him to maintain the action.

An action for forcible entry and detainer will not lie where the ousted occupier is a mere licensee.[97] Further, an action does not lie in favor of a servant who has been ousted from possession of the master's house by the master on termination of the employment.[98] However, the possession of an agent or servant may be such as to authorize him to maintain the action against a forcible entrant or withholder.[99]

e. Married Women

Under modern statutes a married woman may maintain an action for forcible entry and detainer in her own name to recover possession of land belonging to her separate estate.

The wife, although she occupies premises jointly with her husband is, as a rule, not a necessary party plaintiff to vindicate the possession,[1] even though she may have the legal title to the premises invaded.[2] It has been held, however, that an action brought by a wife for a forcible invasion of property in her possession should not be dismissed solely on the ground that the husband is the proper party to bring the action because she might hold possession of the land with her husband's consent,[3] and that, where a wife had the right to the rents and the use of premises, the trustee holding only the naked legal title, the warrants were properly issued in the name of the husband and wife.[4]

Under modern statutes, the wife may maintain this proceeding in her own name to recover possession of land belonging to her statutory separate estate.[5] Under a statute which empowers a wife who has been deserted by her husband to prosecute or defend actions in his name, she may after such desertion maintain forcible entry and detainer in her husband's name against an intruder who ousts her from possession.[6] Further, a woman who together with her husband has received a deed of release from her coheirs for a tract of land in which they held a joint estate may maintain a warrant of forcible detainer without joining her children after her husband's death.[7]

f. Owners of Easements

A person who has the exclusive right to the enjoyment of an easement may maintain an action for forcible entry and detainer for a disturbance of possession.

Since to sustain an action of forcible entry and detainer the possession disturbed must be an exclusive one, see supra § 10, one who enjoys an easement in common with others has no such possession as will entitle him to maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer for a disturbance of such possession.[8] However, where it is made to appear

Forcibly ejecting tenant

Plaintiff landlord may maintain action where defendant, after making forcible entry on land with shotgun, terrorizing plaintiff's farm tenants into acquiescence and taking complete possession under false claim of title, negotiated with plaintiff to buy land and to rent it for year, admitted plaintiff's title and right of pos~ession, and agreed to move off without giving her trouble over possession if she insisted and would not sell or rent land.—Hall v. Haines, 51 P.2d 570, 175 Okl. 81.

Lease of land to tenant by third person

Where plaintiff rented premises to codefendants who paid rent to January 27, 1937, when defendant took possession under a tax deed and rented premises to codefendants who reëntered or remained in occupancy and did not notify plaintiff of repudiation of plaintiff's lease, plaintiff could accept codefendants' repudiation of tenancy under plaintiff as a termination of codefendants' tenancy as of time of defendant's entry, and defendant's entry and occupation through codefendants, after proper notice to vacate, constituted an "unlawful entry" as against, and a "forcible detainer" from, plaintiff, who, through codefendants, would be considered as having had occupancy within five days of defendant's entry.—Woodbury v. that the party complaining has the exclusive right to the enjoyment of an easement, forcible entry and detainer may be maintained,[9] especially where the statute under which the action is brought prohibits the forcible entry "on lands and tenements."[10]

g. Purchasers or Assignees

Unless otherwise provided by statute, where there has been a forcible entry on land the right to maintain an action for forcible entry and detainer does not pass to the assignee or purchaser of the one whose possession was invaded.

A purchaser who is the equitable owner of the premises and who has been let into possession by the vendor may maintain an action for forcible entry and detainer.[11] Under some statutes, a grantee of a grantor in possession may maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer against the tenant of the grantor when delivery of possession is refused,[12] and under other statutes the right to maintain forcible entry and detainer is conferred on the grantees and assigns of any lands, tenements, or other real possessions.[13]

Transfer after forcible entry. The matter is purely statutory, but as a rule, where there has been a forcible or unlawful entry on land, the right to maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer therefor vests at once in the one whose possession is invaded, and this right must be exercised in his own name and does not pass to his assignee or purchaser.[14] Where this is the rule, the words in the statute concerning forcible entry and detainer, which give a right of action to the person entitled to the possession, apply to cases brought for forcible detainer simply and not to those for forcible entry and detainer.[15] Where plaintiff conveys property pendente lite his recovery inures to the benefit of the purchaser.[16]

h. Successful Claimant of Homestead Entry

A homestead entryman whose rights have been finally determined may bring an action of forcible entry and detainer against one whose claim to the land has been canceled by the land department.

Forcible entry and detainer is a proper remedy for a homestead entryman whose rights have been finally determined, as against one whose claim to the land has been canceled by the land department,[17] and although the decision of the secretary of the interior making the award may be wrong, the unsuccessful claimant cannot raise this question in the action;[18] nor is he entitled to hold possession until the improvements are appraised and paid for under the occupying claimant's act.[19]

While it has been held that, until the contest is finally closed before the interior department and the land is awarded to one or the other, an action of unlawful detainer will not lie in behalf of either,[20] it has also been held that the right as between the two settlors for the possession of the land may properly be determined in an action of this character and the question of title to the land afterward determined by proper proceedings in the land department of the government,[21] and that, although the court will not decide questions arising out of conflicting boundaries, priority of settlement, or other questions properly belonging to the land office, it will nevertheless protect actual possession.[22]

i. Tenants in Common

Tenants in common may join in an action of forcible entry and detainer against a third person, but a tenant in common or joint tenant may also maintain such action without joining his cotenants as plaintiffs.

Tenants in common of the whole estate may join in summary proceedings to recover its possession,[23]

although, if it is shown that the right of action does not exist in favor of all plaintiffs joined in the action, it must fail.[24] One tenant in common,[25] one coparcener,[26] or one joint tenant,[27] may maintain the action against a stranger, without joining his cotenants as plaintiffs, because the possession of one is the possession of all and as against a stranger to the title each is entitled to possession of the whole estate.[28]

§ 22. Against Whom

a. In general
b. Corporations

a. In General

In the absence of statute otherwise providing, an action of forcible entry and detainer ordinarily may be maintained only against one in possession of the premises at the time of the commencement of the action.

As shown supra § 5, in case of forcible entry by the owner of the property an action of forcible entry and detainer may be maintained against him and that too, although he may have the legal right to possession. It is the person who makes the forcible entry who is liable in proceedings of this character.[29]

Except as otherwise provided by statute,[30] an action of forcible entry and detainer usually may be maintained only against one in possession at the commencement of the action, and not against one who does not in fact hold the land.[31] However, possession by an agent will satisfy the requirements of this rule,[32] and the action may be brought also against the agent.[33] So where an agent without authority forcibly ejects a tenant from the premises and places the landlord in possession, the landlord as well as the party ejecting the tenant is guilty of forcible entry.[34] A change of possession pending the suit does not affect plaintiff's right of recovery.[35]

Infants and married women. It has been held without mentioning any particular statutory provision that "the remedy of forcible entry and detainer, or the lawful detainer, will lie against married women, and persons under age."[36]

Person having no estate in premises and not in possession thereof cannot be held liable for forcible entry and detainer.—Seidman v. John Craven & Sons Co., 143 A. 726, 6 N. J.Misc. 1062.

Mere participation in forcible entry
One cannot be guilty of forcible entry and detainer merely because he participated in the alleged forcible entry.—Jackson v. Black, Mo. App., 264 S.W. 432.

Person who had merely signed with another contract to purchase from state land which state had leased to plaintiff was not liable for forcible detainer.—Paxton v. Fisher, 45 P.2d 903, 86 Utah 408.

Entrant under permission of tenant of owner
Where a tenant who has not repudiated tenancy by notice to landlord permits an entrant to enter on possession of tenant, the entrant does not acquire possession of premises but is no more than a "permittee," whose rights on premises are limited by permission given him and the term of tenant's lease, and entrant's entrance is not an "unlawful entry" and hence such entrant is not ordinarily the subject of an action of forcible detainer.—Woodbury v. Bunker, 98 P.2d 948, 98 Utah 216.

Persons under "color of title"
"Color of title" is that which in appearance is title but which in reality is not title, and parents of owner of property, who had moved on property at owner's request for purpose of caring for it and maintaining home for owner's children, were not holding possession under "color of title" so as to preclude maintenance of forcible entry and detainer action against them by guardian of children after death of owner.—Boland v. Heck, 65 P.2d 1213, 179 Okl. 403.

Possession by one defendant and tenants
Possession by defendants in an action of unlawful entry and detainer at the institution of the action, justifying recovery against them, is sufficiently shown where it appears that the premises were then occupied by one of defendants and their tenants.—Superior v. Peters, 118 S.E. 540, 94 W.Va. 376.

brought against a licensee in possession after notice of revocation of the license has been given.[37]

One coming in under person liable. Probably the action of forcible entry and detainer may lie against any person going in under the person who has made a forcible entry collusively, with knowledge of such force and for the purpose of availing himself of it, because such person may well be considered as himself committing a forcible entry.[38]

Party entering under conveyance by tenant by curtesy. Under a statute, defining unlawful detainer as where defendant enters by contract, either as tenant or claiming through or under a tenant, the action of unlawful detainer lies only where defendant entered by contract and as lessee, or under a lessee, and hence that form of action will not lie against one who entered under a conveyance from a tenant by curtesy.[39]

Persons procuring forcible entry. A person may be guilty of forcible entry who is not actually present and does not actively assist therein, if it is done by one who acted at the time under his direction and procurement.[40]

b. Corporations

Forcible entry and detainer may be maintained against a private or municipal corporation.

Forcible entry and detainer will lie against a private corporation,[41] unless the act complained of was a voluntary, willful trespass on the part of its officers or servants.[42] An action of unlawful detainer will lie against a municipal corporation.[43]

C. NOTICE TO QUIT AND DEMAND FOR POSSESSION

§ 23. Necessity and Waiver

When required by statute, a notice to quit or demand for possession is a condition precedent to an action for forcible entry and detainer, although the right to the notice may be waived.

In actions for forcible entry and detainer, no notice to quit or demand for possession is necessary,[44] especially where it would be unavailing,[45] unless a notice or demand is required by statute.[46] Where the statutes require notice, the courts acquire no jurisdiction unless such notice has been given.[47]

Under some of the statutes it seems that notice or demand is necessary in all cases of forcible entry and detainer.[48] Under others, it has been decided that it is not necessary where the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist between the parties,[49] or where the original entry was forcible[50] or wrongful,[51] or where defendant after entering peaceably on real property turns out by force, threats, or menacing conduct the party in possession,[52] or where he by force or by menaces and threats of violence unlawfully holds and keeps possession of any real property, whether the same was acquired peaceably or otherwise.[53] Under the statutes relating merely to unlawful detainer, a notice or demand is ordinarily necessary,[54] some of the statutes making a failure or refusal to deliver possession after demand a constituent element of the offense.[55] A demand is not necessary for the maintenance of the action to recover possession where defendant's right of possession has terminated by limitation.[56]

Waiver of notice or defects therein. The right to the notice required by statute in actions for forcible entry and detainer,[57] or in actions of forcible[58] or unlawful[59] detainer,[60] may be waived. However, an appearance before a justice does not waive any defect in the notice under the statute.[61]

§ 24. Form and Contents

The form and contents of a notice to quit or demand for possession required as a condition precedent to an action of forcible entry and detainer must comply with statutory requirements.

The notice to quit or demand for possession as a condition precedent to an action for forcible entry and detainer need not be in writing,[62] unless a written notice or demand is required by statute.[63] When a written notice is necessary under the statute, the giving of such a notice is a prerequisite to jurisdiction.[64]

As to the form and contents of the notice or demand a substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient,[65] and, if there is a statutory form of notice, it will of course be sufficient to give a notice in the language prescribed.[66] The notice must contain a description of the property sought to be recovered,[67] but it is only necessary that the description should be sufficient to identify the premises.[68] It must also appear who claims the premises and makes the demand therefor;[69] and no one but the person who thus claims the premises and makes the demand can maintain the action under such notice;[70] but this may be shown from the signature at the end and need not appear in the body of the notice or demand.[71] The notice need not state that damages will be asked if the possession is not surrendered.[72] It is not necessary that a demand for possession should specify any date at which the property must be given up.[73] The name and address of defendant need not appear on the demand.[74]

Signature. The notice or demand may be signed by plaintiff's agent or attorney,[75] but must be signed in his representative capacity.[76] If the required notice is not signed by plaintiff or his agent or attorney the court acquires no jurisdiction, and any judgment rendered is a nullity.[77]

Amendment. The court cannot acquire jurisdiction by amending a notice not in compliance with the statutory requirements so as to comply with the required form, because by so doing defendant is not given the time required by statute.[78]

§ 25. Service

A notice to quit or demand for possession as a prerequisite to an action for forcible entry and detainer must be served in the manner prescribed by the statute.

Where the statute specifically describes the manner in which the notice to quit or demand for possession shall be served, its requirements must be strictly observed.[79] Under some of the statutes service must be made by leaving a copy with defendant[80] or, if he is absent, with some person over a certain age on the premises.[81] Under most[82] but not all[83] of these statutes either form of service is sufficient. It is not sufficient merely to read a copy to defendant[84] or to send a copy by mail.[85] The demand must be made on the party who is in possession and detaining the possession,[86] but may be delivered by an agent or attorney instead of by plaintiff personally.[87] Notwithstanding a notice may be addressed to two parties it is sufficient if it is served on the party on whom the demand should have been made.[88]

Time. In the absence of a statutory requirement the time of the notice or demand is immaterial,[89] provided it is given before the suit is instituted[90] and after the particular entry complained of.[91] Under some of the statutes the notice or demand must be served a certain number of days before suit is instituted,[92] and a compliance with this requirement is jurisdictional,[93] but the fact that a longer notice is given is immaterial and does not affect the jurisdiction of the court,[94] provided the action is commenced within a reasonable time thereafter,[95] but a delay for an unreasonable time after giving notice of bringing suit may operate as an abandonment or waiver of the notice.[96]

One who has regained possession of property may show in defense to an action for forcible entry and detainer that he was a stranger to the legal proceedings under which he was turned out.—Kercheval v. Ambler, 7 J.J.Marsh., Ky., 626, 23 Am.D. 446—26 C.J. p 830 note 11.

Joint ownership

Where one joint tenant cannot employ the writ of forcible entry to oust his cotenant, defendant, in proceedings on such writ, has the right to prove that plaintiff and defendant's landlord are joint owners of the land.—Chapman v. Farris, 242 S. W. 359, 195 Ky. 362.

Persons by whom action maintainable see supra § 21.

An unsuccessful contestant for government land who, during the contest, has made improvements upon the land, is not entitled to hold possession until the improvements are appraised and paid for under the Occupying Claimant's Act, and such a defense cannot be made in an action for forcible entry and detainer.—Howe v. Parker, 90 P. 15, 18 Okl. 282—Cook v. McCord, 75 P. 294, 13 Okl. 506.

Thus he may set up as a defense the invalidity of a deed on which plaintiff based his claim,[98] and where the statute so provides possession by defendant for a specified period of time prior to the alleged entry is an available defense.[99] So it is a good defense that plaintiff voluntarily abandoned the possession of the premises in controversy before the entry complained of,[1] that prior to the entry plaintiff disclaimed to defendant any interest or claim to the premises,[2] or, as will be seen infra § 33, that the proceedings were not brought within the time prescribed by statute. Equitable defenses, however, are not available in these proceedings,[3] unless there is special statutory authority therefor.[4] So it is not a defense that the entry by defendant was made in good faith,[5] that plaintiff had leased the premises to one with whose right defendant does not connect himself,[6] that the premises had been leased for an immoral purpose,[7] that plaintiff conveyed his interest to a third person pending suit,[8] that plaintiff held title as trustee where under the trust he was entitled to possession,[9] that plaintiff abandoned the land after defendant's entry,[10] that defendant has yielded up or lost possession of a part of the premises,[11] that defendant has become bankrupt during the pendency of an appeal by him,[12] that possession of the premises was delivered to plaintiff after institution of the suit in the absence of proof of settlement,[13] that plaintiff regained possession of the premises pending an appeal by defendant,[14] that a corporation plaintiff has so conducted its affairs as to subject it to a quo warranto by the state,[15] that defendant did not refuse to quit possession, if it appears that he holds over an unreasonable length of time after demand,[16] that defendant in committing the acts complained of was acting in the capacity of agent and not in his own right,[17] or that plaintiff has been guilty of the same wrong toward defendant.[18] sessory right is no defense to an action of forcible entry and detainer.

Matter in abatement only is available as a defense in some jurisdictions;[19] but in other jurisdictions the contrary rule prevails.[20]

In accordance with the rules heretofore considered supra §§ 6, 7, unless the rule has been changed by statute,[21] it is not a defense to an action of forcible entry and detainer that defendant held title to the land himself[22] or was entitled to the possession thereof.[23]

§ 28. Set-Off, Counterclaim, or Recoupment

Generally no set-off, counterclaim, cross complaint, or cross demand in the nature of a recoupment can be interposed in forcible entry and detainer proceedings.

Under the statutes of some jurisdictions, defendant cannot in forcible entry and detainer proceedings file a set-off or counterclaim of any character,[24] a cross complaint,[25] or any cross demand in the nature of a recoupment;[26] and it has been held that if it is conceded that a counterclaim may be filed in proceedings of this nature a counterclaim which requires cross judgments to be rendered at law for relief which is only appropriate to a court of chancery is not permissible.[27] Under statutes of some states no counterclaim can be pleaded in a justice's court except as a set-off for rent or damages in cases where judgment for rent or damages is claimed.[28] Defendant cannot counterclaim damages resulting from a wrongful eviction under the writ issued in an action of forcible entry and detainer, but must resort to a separate action on the bond.[29]

E. ABATEMENT OF ACTION

§ 29. Pendency of Another Action or Proceeding

The pendency of a prior action for the same cause of action between the same parties ordinarily is a ground for abatement of a later action of forcible or unlawful entry and detainer.

court of competent jurisdiction, predicated on the same cause of action, and between the same parties, constitutes good ground for abatement of a later action of forcible or unlawful entry and detainer.[31] To constitute ground for abatement, however, the actions must be identical or substantially identical, that is, they must be between the same parties, based on the same cause of action, involve the same issues, and be capable of authorizing the same relief;[32] and a prior action which has been effectively terminated, of course, cannot be pleaded in abatement of a subsequent action.[33]

§ 30. Death of Party

In the absence of a saving statute an action of forcible or unlawful entry and detainer abates on the death of either party.

Whether an action of forcible or unlawful entry or detainer abates on the death of a party depends on the terms of the survival statute in the particular jurisdiction. In the absence of a saving statute it abates on the death of either party.[34] Under the statute in some jurisdictions, however, the action survives;[35] but an action brought by one who has only a life estate in the land abates by his death.[36]

F. JURISDICTION, VENUE, TIME TO SUE, AND LIMITATIONS

§ 31. Jurisdiction

Statutory provisions determine the courts which have jurisdiction of actions of forcible or unlawful entry and detainer and the extent of their powers and jurisdiction.

As a rule, original jurisdiction of actions of forcible or unlawful entry and detainer is given to courts of justices of the peace or to courts of like inferior and limited jurisdiction,[37] such as court commissioners,[38] probate courts,[39] county courts,[40] district courts,[41] municipal courts within the territorial lim-

Prior action involving title

(1) The pendency of a prior action to adjudicate title is not ground for abatement of a forcible entry and detainer action which involves only possession.—Lyons v. Lyons, 90 P.2d 391, 185 Okl. 70—26 C.J. p 841 note 31 [d].

Prior action to enforce equitable rights

The scope and purpose of an action under the unlawful detainer statute is so essentially different from that of a district court action to enforce equitable rights in the property that the pendency of the latter action is not a bar to a prosecution of the former.—William Weisman Holding Co. v. Miller, 188 N.W. 732, 152 Minn. 330.

In Texas the action of forcible entry and detainer and the action of trespass to try title or other possessory action in the district court provide cumulative and not exclusive remedies and may be resorted to and prosecuted concurrently.—Omohundro v. Nowlin, Civ.App., 142 S.W.2d 399.

its of their respective municipalities,[42] and police courts of cities of a designated class.[43] In some states this original jurisdiction of justices of the peace and like courts is exclusive;[44] in others courts of general original jurisdiction have also original jurisdiction of these summary proceedings,[45] and in some localities these courts have both appellate and concurrent original jurisdiction in this class of cases.[46] In still other states some of these courts of general jurisdiction have exclusive jurisdiction of this class of actions.[47]

The extent of jurisdiction and powers of the court on which jurisdiction is conferred in this class of actions is measured by the terms of the statutes conferring jurisdiction in the particular state.[48] Where jurisdiction is conferred on courts of inferior or limited jurisdiction, their powers and duties are defined by the particular statute respecting forcible entries and detainers and not by the statute defining and limiting the jurisdiction of such courts generally.[49] So, where jurisdiction in this class of actions is conferred on courts of superior jurisdiction, they do not proceed, under the statutes in some states, by virtue of their powers as courts of general jurisdiction but derive their authority wholly from the particular statute respecting forcible entries and detainers.[50] Accordingly, depending on the terms of the statutes in the particular state, courts of superior[51] or inferior[52] jurisdiction are regarded in some states as courts of special and limited jurisdiction when exercising jurisdiction in forcible entry and detainer proceedings, while in other states courts of inferior jurisdiction, such as justices' courts, are considered as courts of general jurisdiction in such proceedings.[53]

While improper and unnecessary allegations as to title, whether made by plaintiff or defendant, do not deprive the court in which an action is properly brought of jurisdiction,[54] an action involving title brought in a court without jurisdiction to try questions of title should be dismissed,[55] or, as appears in Courts § 502 b, be removed to a court which pos-

Extent of jurisdiction under particular statutes

(1) General statutory provision authorizing justices of peace to inquire into unlawful and forcible entries gives justices jurisdiction in other cases besides those set out in statute respecting specific cases in which jurisdiction may be exercised.—Martin v. Bircher, 188 N.E. 365, 46 Ohio App. 239.

(2) Under provision of constitution giving justices' courts concurrent jurisdiction with district courts in cases of "forcible entry" and "unlawful detainer," all actions falling within the general category of forcible and unlawful entry and forcible and unlawful detainer are included in its terms, since the words "forcible entry" are sufficient to comprehend "unlawful entry" and words "unlawful detainer" are sufficient to comprehend "forcible detainer."—State ex rel. Hamshaw v. Justice's Court of Union Tp. in and for Madison County, 88 P.2d 1, 108 Mont. 12.

(3) Justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of subject matter of forcible detainer complaint, where statement of claim disclosed that defendants were vendees in default and not tenants.—Knight v. Haley, 176 A. 461, 6 W.W.Harr., Del., 366.

(4) Statute limiting jurisdiction of justices of the peace in townships having between two hundred thousand and four hundred thousand population in unlawful detainer action to lands lying within respective townships, together with following statutory section, repeals statutes making action cognizable before any justice of peace of county in so far as statute relates to justices of peace in townships of between two hundred thousand and four hundred thousand population.—State ex rel. sesses jurisdiction; and if it appears that, on account of the limited jurisdiction of the court in which the forcible entry and detainer proceedings are pending, all matters between the parties cannot be adjudicated, either party may maintain an action in a court of competent jurisdiction for proper relief.[56]

Compliance with statutes as jurisdictional requisite. Since, as appears supra § 3, the action of forcible entry and detainer is a special statutory proceeding, summary in its nature, and in derogation of the common law, it follows that the statute conferring jurisdiction must be strictly pursued in the method of procedure prescribed by it, or the jurisdiction will fail to attach, and the proceeding will be coram non judice and void,[57] unless the defects in procedure may be, and are, waived.[58] There is no presumption in favor of the record.[59] It must appear that the statutory remedy was strictly pursued and the facts which give jurisdiction must appear affirmatively on the face of the record, otherwise the proceedings will be not merely voidable, but absolutely void, as being coram non judice.[60]

Value of property in controversy. The jurisdiction is not affected by the value of the property, the possession of which is sought to be recovered;[61] and it has been held that in an action for forcible entry and detainer the jurisdiction of justices in the matter of damages is not limited to the amount specified as the limit of their jurisdiction in civil actions generally.[62]

Abandonment of premises by defendant. Where, pending the trial, no question of damages being involved, it is made to appear after issue joined that defendant abandoned the premises and his claim to possession thereof, the court is without jurisdiction in some states to proceed further and render judgment for plaintiff.[63]

Objections to jurisdiction. The question of jurisdiction may properly be raised at any stage of the proceedings.[64]

§ 32. Venue

The venue of forcible entry and detainer actions is generally fixed by statute. Ordinarily such actions must be brought in the county where the land lies.

The venue of forcible entry and detainer actions is frequently regulated by specific statutory provisions in which cases these specific provisions control as to questions of venue.[65] Under these provisions the action of forcible entry and detainer is generally local in its nature[66] and must be brought in the county in which the land in question lies.[67] Under the statutes in some states the action may be brought before any justice of the peace of such county;[68] but under the statutes of other states it must ordinarily be brought in the precinct where the property is situated,[69] unless there is no justice of the peace in that precinct able or qualified by law to act, in which case the action may be brought be-

58. Organization of court
Where a court of unlawful entry and detainer was organized composed of three justices of the peace, pursuant to proceeding instituted in that behalf, it acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter without regard to whether the two justices other than the one issuing the process had been summoned in manner required by law, and such court was vested with authority to enter a judgment in the cause at such time and place as was permitted by law.—Amis v. Action not confined to county
Under statute providing that party held out of possession may exhibit his complaint before any justice of peace of county within which land may lie, it is not essential to jurisdiction that affidavit be made before justice of peace of county in which lands lie, since the word "may" is not used in the statute in mandatory sense.—Gee v. fore a justice of the peace in any adjoining precinct.[70]

The grant of concurrent jurisdiction to two states over a river forming a common boundary does not authorize the bringing of the action in one of these states for the recovery of lands situated anywhere within the territorial limits of the other.[71]

§ 33. Time to Sue and Limitations

Forcible or unlawful entry and detainer actions are barred unless brought within the time prescribed by statute.

Ordinarily the forcible or unlawful entry and detainer statutes prescribe the time within which actions based on such statutes must be brought, and unless the action is brought within the time prescribed it will be barred.[72] Such statutes are subject to strict construction.[73] An entry on unimproved land with intent to clear and fit it for cultivation is sufficient to put the statute of limitations in operation.[74] An inclosure is unnecessary.[75] If a statute provides that peaceable and uninterrupted possession with plaintiff's knowledge for a designated time shall be a bar, defendant cannot rely on it unless plaintiff had knowledge of the adverse possession.[76] Under such a statute defendant's possession is not interrupted by a notice against trespass not acceded to by him.[77]

G. PARTIES, PROCESS, AND APPEARANCE

§ 34. Parties

General rules as to parties ordinarily apply in forcible or unlawful entry and detainer actions.

The usual rules governing questions as to parties in civil actions in general ordinarily apply in forcible entry and detainer actions.[78] Thus one who is present and participates in the forcible entry and continues to support and assist the party entering to remain on the premises may properly be joined as a party defendant in forcible entry and detainer;[79] but two or more persons who hold in severalty different parts of the premises in controversy cannot be joined as codefendants in the action,[80] unless the statute so permits.[81]

Husband and wife. It has been held that, in a case of a joint occupancy of premises by husband and wife, the husband is as a general rule the only proper party defendant.[82] The wife generally is not in joint possession with the husband merely because she is there and is neither a necessary party plaintiff to vindicate[83] nor a necessary party to defend[84] the possession. Even though it appears that the wife was the active participant in making the wrongful entry, if there is enough in the proof to justify the conclusion that the husband had advised and consented to the proceeding, if he had not expressly directed it, he is a proper party defendant;[85] but a wife cannot be ousted from her own property in an action of forcible entry and detainer against her husband alone.[86] Where forcible entry and detainer constitute the joint act of both husband and wife, both are proper parties to an action to recover possession.[87] Where the principal defendant was a married woman, doing business as a sole trader, it has been held that it is proper[88] and even necessary[89] to join her husband as a party defendant; but there is authority apparently to the contrary.[90]

§ 35. Process and Appearance

To give the court jurisdiction, a valid and sufficient summons or other process must, as a general rule, be issued and served in the manner provided by statute.

As a general rule a valid summons or other process must issue at the time of the filing of the complaint in order to give the court jurisdiction.[91] The form and sufficiency thereof depends largely on statutory provisions,[92] and as to these matters it has been decided that a summons is only required "to be sufficient on its face to show what is intended thereby;"[93] that the complaint made and verified by plaintiff under oath may be looked to in aid of a warrant;[94] that if the summons contains the substance of the complaint so as to apprise defendant of the nature and extent of the claim it is sufficient without reciting the complaint fully,[95] although a summons in which the nature of the action is not stated or the relief demanded mentioned is void;[96] that a summons is not rendered defective by its omission to state that the place at which defendant is to appear is the usual place of holding the justice's court in the district;[97] that a process is not bad because plaintiffs in describing their possession stated that they were possessed as executors;[98] and that a summons need not negative the defense of the statute of limitations.[99]

Description of land. A summons should describe the land in controversy with convenient certainty so as to enable the officer to deliver possession, but the description need not be so certain as in itself and alone to enable him to do so; if it can be rendered certain by extrinsic evidence it is sufficient.[1]

Service and return. Process must be made returnable within the time,[2] and to the court[3] and to the term of court,[4] provided by statute; and it must be served within the time[5] and in the manner[6] prescribed by statute, unless service is waived,

In Illinois
(1) Under Mun.Ct.Act § 48, Cahill St. c 37 par. 436, and the Forcible Entry and Detainer Act, Cahill Ill.St. p 57, substituted service is now permissible in forcible entry and detainer cases in the municipal court where no claim for rent or damages is included.—MacLean Drug Co. v. Stoeffhas, 229 Ill.App. 492.

(2) Formerly, substituted service could not be employed in actions commenced in the municipal court, as by a general appearance.[7] Under a statute providing that when a summons is served by a person other than the sheriff, it must be returned with an affidavit of service by such person, it is not necessary that it should appear that the party making the service did so at the request of plaintiff or his attorney.[8]

To what county. Although the action may be confined by statute to the county in which the land is situated, yet process may issue to and be served in the county where defendant resides,[9] although different from that where the land is located.[10]

Against several defendants. Where process issues against several defendants, it is no legal objection to the service that it was not served on all of them,[11] and plaintiff may proceed against those on whom process has been served.[12]

Amendment. Where the names of the parties are properly set out in the complaint and bond, but wholly omitted from the writ, plaintiff, pending a motion to quash the writ, should be permitted to amend.[13]

New process. If a summons is void, or not served, defendant may be brought into court by a new summons.[14]

H. PLEADING

§ 36. Mode and Form in General

The mode and form of pleading in actions for forcible entry and detainer are considered with reference to the complaint infra §§ 37–46, with reference to a plea, answer, or cross complaint infra § 47, and with reference to a reply infra § 48.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 37. Complaint

A complaint in forcible entry and detainer is sufficient where it is in conformity with a statute prescribing its contents, or where it sets out the facts entitling plaintiff to a recovery.

A complaint which contains all the allegations required by a statute prescribing what it shall allege[15] or which follows a form prescribed by statute[16] is sufficient, and a complaint will be sufficient which follows a precedent furnished by a state form book, notwithstanding it may appear defective if treated as a technical pleading, where it has long been adopted in practice and has received the sanction of the courts.[17] It is said that a complaint which follows a statute prescribing the necessary allegations therefor is sui generis, and the proceedings based on the statute are not to be measured or determined by the ordinary rules and proceedings in civil cases.[18] Notwithstanding the sufficiency of a complaint drawn in accordance with the statutory provisions, complainant is not bound to avail himself of the benefits of those statutes, but is still at liberty to set out in full the particular facts to bring his case within the statutes. If, however, he elects to do this, he can omit no fact which is essential to his case or which is necessarily included in, or implied by, the general form of complaint indicated by statute.[19]

Where a petition shows a suit is based on defendant's unlawful seizure and detention of real property, the fact that the prayer for relief includes a prayer for rent, as well as prayers for restoration of the property, does not render the action one ex contractu.[20] An averment of a forcible and unlawful entry, and that defendants forcibly detained the premises so unlawfully taken, does not lay the de-

tainer as an independent ground of relief.[21]

§ 38. —— Necessity of Written Complaint

Written pleadings are ordinarily but not universally requisite in proceedings for forcible entry and detainer, the matter being largely regulated by statute.

Under the rule prevailing in some jurisdictions written pleadings are not required.[22] Under the rule prevailing in other jurisdictions, a written complaint drawn in compliance with the requirements of the governing statute is essential to jurisdiction,[23] and failure to comply with the provisions of the statute in such respect renders the proceedings coram non judice and void.[24] It has also been held that, unless dispensed with by statute, a written complaint is necessary, although the proceedings are commenced before a justice of the peace;[25] that a mere verbal complaint is insufficient;[26] and that if no written complaint is filed the circuit court acquires no jurisdiction on appeal from the justice.[27]

§ 39. —— Requisites and Sufficiency in General

Great strictness of pleading is, as a rule, not required, although jurisdiction must be shown.

In suits brought under the statutes relating to forcible entry and detainer, particularly where instituted in courts of justices of the peace, great strictness in the complaint or affidavit is not requisite.[28] Nevertheless, to give the court jurisdiction it is necessary that the complaint should embody such a statement of facts as brings the party clearly within some one of the class of cases for which the statutes provide a remedy,[29] as these proceedings are summary and contrary to the course of the common law.[30] The complaint must show enough on its face to give the court jurisdiction without resort to parol testimony.[31] It must show where the premises are situated.[32] It is better practice for the complaint to show that the premises are within the territorial jurisdiction of the court wherein suit is instituted;[33] and if action is instituted before a justice of the peace, the complaint should show that the premises are situated in the county in which he sits,[34] and in his precinct, if his jurisdiction is limited to his precinct,[35] or that there is no justice in the precinct where the premises are situated.[36] However, if the action is cognizable before any justice of the county where the acts are committed, the complaint need not allege the property to have been in the city ward of the justice before whom the complaint was filed,[37] and a complaint, which describes the premises in compliance with a statute merely enjoining on complainant the duty to describe the property, without in terms requiring a specific averment that the property is within the district of the justice, has been held sufficient despite omission of such a specific averment, the court taking the view that failure to include such an averment is not a fatal defect even though the record of the case must show somewhere that the property is within the jurisdiction of the justice.[38]

(1) In unlawful detainer action before justice of peace in township of between two hundred thousand and four hundred thousand population, complaint must allege that land involved was situated in township; and complaint not alleging that lands involved were situated in township was fatally defective, and justice acquired no jurisdiction.—State ex rel. Brown v. Bird, 73 S.W.2d 821, 228 Mo.App. 800.

(2) Failure to allege that lands involved were situated within township, rendered all proceedings in cause void, regardless of other claimed objects, and neither first justice nor justice to whom cause was transferred nor circuit court to which judgment was appealed acquired jurisdiction.—State ex rel. Mere clerical mistakes[39] or surplusage[40] will not ordinarily vitiate the complaint.

Recovery as for trespass. Where the complaint is insufficient to warrant a recovery under the forcible entry statute, it has been held that it may be such as to authorize a recovery as in an ordinary action of trespass, if the facts warrant it.[41]

Allegations respecting personalty. The complaint in forcible entry and detainer should not contain allegations respecting defendant's appropriation of personal property.[42]

Under statutes prescribing the form of complaint, a departure from the prescribed form is not fatal if in substance a cause of action in forcible entry and detainer or in unlawful detainer is set forth.[43]

§ 40. —— Allegations as to Title or Possession

a. Plaintiff's possession
b. Plaintiff's title or estate

a. Plaintiff's Possession

(1) Fact of possession
(2) Right of possession

(1) Fact of Possession

Ordinarily the complaint in an action for forcible entry and detainer should allege plaintiff's actual possession of the premises at the time of the alleged entry in terms or in equivalent language, and an averment of title or ownership is insufficient; but under some statutes there may be an allegation of constructive possession.

The general rule is that in an action for forcible entry and detainer the complaint must allege that plaintiff was in actual possession of the premises at the time of the alleged forcible entry.[44] The general allegation that plaintiff was in the actual peaceable possession of the premises at the time of the entry is a sufficient averment of actual possession;[45] the evidentiary facts by which such allegations are to be proved need not be set out,[46] nor is it necessary to allege in terms that the possession was actual, if this fact sufficiently appears from other averments in the complaint.[47] On the other hand, it is not sufficient to allege that plaintiff was lawfully entitled to possession,[48] that he was "seized" of the premises,[49] or the owner thereof,[50] or was lawfully and peaceably possessed of a leasehold interest,[51] that plaintiff purchased the premises from the state "as an occupant,"[52] or that plaintiff was in possession on a particular day and that defendant at a subsequent day forcibly entered.[53] Inconsistent averments as to possession render the complaint bad.[54] The complaint need not state the precise time when plaintiff was possessed of the premises and, if stated, it may be rejected as surplusage.[55]

Constructive possession. If under the provisions of the particular statute, where the premises sought to be recovered are public domain, it is made a condition precedent that the boundaries of the claim shall be marked and staked by the holder, the complaint to be sufficient must show the segregation of the land of which plaintiff claims to be in the peaceable possession and that it was segregated in the fashion pointed out by the statute.[56] Under the express provisions of some statutes, where the complaint is based on a forcible holding out of the premises, the complaint must allege that the premises were in the constructive possession of plaintiff at the time of the holding out.[57]

Unless the plaintiff's right to possession is involved, there need be no allegation in the complaint as to such right.

Inasmuch as the right to possession is not ordinarily involved, stated supra § 7, no allegation as to plaintiff's right of possession is necessary or proper, unless required by some special statutory provision.[58] Where, however, plaintiff's right to possession is involved, the complaint should contain a sufficient averment of such right.[59] Under some statutes making an allegation of plaintiff's right to possession necessary, it is sufficient to allege generally that plaintiff is entitled to possession,[60] while under others, the facts showing the right to possession are required to be set out,[61] and even in jurisdictions where it is unnecessary to set out the facts, if the pleader assumes to do so they must be set forth fully and with precision.[62] An affidavit in the present tense alleging plaintiff's right of possession but filed several months later is not a sufficient allegation as to right of possession.[63] In actions where plaintiff has only constructive possession, it has been held that he must allege his right of possession and the facts on which this right is based.[64]

b. Plaintiff's Title or Estate

While allegations as to plaintiff's title or estate are ordinarily not necessary in a complaint for forcible entry and detainer, they may become so by virtue of statutory provisions therefor. Where required, such allegations should set forth a title or estate within the governing statute and should comply with the usual rules of good pleading as respects certainty and avoidance of mere conclusions.

Since title is not involved in an action for forcible entry and detainer, as shown supra § 6, where the entry or the infringement of plaintiff's possession is with force and a strong hand, the complaint need not, in the absence of some statute requiring it, allege the title or estate of plaintiff in the premises.[65] Nevertheless, if required by statute, the complaint must set out plaintiff's title[66] or interest,[67] or the nature of his estate in the premises.[68] Where the statute renders it necessary to show that plaintiff had some estate or right in the premises, it is not essential to describe his interest with technical accuracy but it is sufficient merely to aver that he has an estate within the statute without describing the particular estate.[69] The following allegations as to plaintiff's estate have been held sufficient: That plaintiff claims by virtue of a fee simple,[70] or has a "freehold in fee simple"[71] or an unexpired term of years,[72] or had "lawful and peaceable possession of the premises for the space of five years."[73] It has been held sufficient to allege that plaintiff was possessed as tenant for years of a leasehold estate not yet ended,[74] or is a tenant at will,[75] and allegations showing facts fairly implying ownership have been held sufficient.[76] On the other hand a statement that complainant had a legal right and estate to the premises is bad as amounting to a conclusion of law,[77] and an allegation that complainants were "tenants for years or lessors" of the premises is bad for uncertainty.[78] An allegation that petitioner "became entitled" and went into possession of the premises "by virtue of a certain arrangement with the lessee thereof,"[79] or that he was in the peaceable possession and occupancy of

Lack of specific allegation permissible
Where there was no specific allegation in complaint that plaintiff in detainer suit was entitled to possession, an allegation that defendant wrongfully detained and withheld possession from plaintiff implied an allegation that plaintiff was entitled to possession and, even though such statement was a conclusion, was sufficient after judgment.—Puckett v. the premises and lawfully entitled to remain and continue in possession,[80] or that he "is the tenant of the premises pursuant to an agreement with the landlord,"[81] does not satisfy a statutory requirement that "the interest" of plaintiff in the premises shall be described. An allegation of interest is not equivalent to a description of the interest; the petition should disclose the nature of the right to the possession and how and from whom it was acquired.[82]

§ 41. —— Description of Premises

a. Necessity of description
b. Sufficiency of description

a. Necessity of Description

It is essential that the complaint in a proceeding for forcible entry and detainer describe the premises.

The complaint must contain a description of the premises,[83] and where no written pleadings are necessary, there should be a description of the premises in the warrant.[84] The description is jurisdictional,[85] and unless the complaint sufficiently describes the property, the justice will be without jurisdiction and his subsequent proceedings thereon void.[86] No premises not described in the complaint can be recovered.[87]

b. Sufficiency of Description

Generally speaking a description of the premises in a complaint for forcible entry and detainer is sufficient if it enables identification of the property. It may be sufficient to describe the premises by metes and bounds, by recognized house numbers or by section, subdivision, township, and range, but descriptions omitting county and state have been held defective.

Any description by which the premises can be readily identified and located will be sufficient.[88] Reasonable and not absolute certainty of description is required.[89] Such certainty in description as apprises defendant of the premises which he is charged with entering and will guide in executing the writ of restitution is all that is requisite,[90] but at least this degree of certainty is necessary.[91]

Description of property located in a city by the number of the lot, its location, and the manner in which it is used, is sufficient,[92] as is also a description of the property by recognized house numbers;[93] but a description of the property as the lot on which a building with a designated number was situated at a past date is not a sufficient description without showing that the building still stands on the lot.[94] A description of the land by section and subdivisions thereof, township, and range, the state and county being given, will be sufficient;[95] and it has been held that this will be sufficient without designating the state and county,[96] or the state, county, and meridian.[97] There is, however, authority to the effect that the omission of the state or county in which the land is situated will render the complaint fatally defective.[98] The premises may be described by reference in the complaint to

Stating county and state in caption Petition in unlawful detainer suit which did not name in body county and state in which property in question was situated, but which contained name of township, county, and state in caption, with an appropriate reference thereto in the body of the

an exhibit containing a description.[99] A description of the premises as part of a tract designated without specifying the part meant is insufficient,[1] but, where other facts are alleged by which the premises can be readily identified, it will be sufficient.[2]

Erroneous statements in the description may be rejected as surplusage if the remaining statements sufficiently identify the property.[3] If the property is otherwise distinctly described, error in describing it by section, township, etc., will not vitiate the complaint.[4] Unnecessary prolixity of description does not vitiate the complaint, if the property can be readily identified therefrom;[5] and, if the complaint states one cause of action in several counts, the description of the premises in one count will be sufficient.[6]

Description by metes and bounds. A description of the premises by metes and bounds is sufficient,[7] unless the metes and bounds given do not inclose any land;[8] and it is not necessary in addition to metes and bounds to specify the land by statutory demarcation of section, township, and range.[9] It is not necessary, however, that the premises be described by metes and bounds if they are otherwise described with sufficient certainty.[10]

Stating quantity. It is not necessary to state the amount of land if it is otherwise described with reasonable certainty;[11] and an erroneous statement of the quantity of land may be rejected as surplusage where the description is otherwise accurate and complete.[12] When the other parts of the description are not sufficiently certain, the quantity becomes essential in determining the identity of the land, although as an element in the description of land the statement of the quantity is the least reliable.[13]

§ 42. —— Allegations as to Force, Entry, and Detainer

a. Entry and detainer
b. Force and unlawfulness

a. Entry and Detainer

A complaint for forcible entry and detainer should allege both the forcible entry and the subsequent detainer, but no allegation as to entry is required where the action is based only on the forcible detainer.

In actions for forcible entry and detainer, an allegation of entry by defendant on the premises in question is necessary.[14] While there is authority to the effect that no such allegation is necessary where the action is based on a forcible detainer only,[15] it has been held, under statutes providing for an action of unlawful detainer where a lawful and peaceable entry was followed by an unlawful or forcible holding, that the complaint should allege not only the subsequent unlawful or forcible detention but also the preceding lawful and peaceable entry.[16]

Since a forcible entry is the gist of an action for forcible entry and detainer, the averment as to detainer in such an action is not stated as an independent ground of relief but as a mere continuation or consequence of the entry.[17] It is, however, necessary always to allege a detention of the premises[18] at the time of the institution of the action,[19] for in the absence of such detention the acts complained of would amount to no more than a trespass.[20] It would seem that the complaint should sufficiently show that it was plaintiff from whom complaint, was sufficient to confer jurisdiction on justice of peace.—Thomas v. Thomas, Mo.App., 74 S.W.2d 263.

the land was detained.[21] The complaint need not deny the existence of possession by defendant for such a time as would bar the action.[22] A complaint showing that defendant has been in possession of the property for over a year, but which does not show such possession to have been quiet, is not bad as showing a defense under a statute making quiet possession for a year by defendant a defense.[23]

b. Force and Unlawfulness

A complaint for forcible entry and detainer or for forcible detainer should allege the use of force, although the particular acts need not be set forth, and, where the statute requires the acts to be unlawful, the unlawfulness thereof should be averred.

Subject to exceptions under statutes modifying the usual requirement of force, discussed supra § 17,[24] whether the cause of action is a forcible entry and detainer or a forcible detainer, an averment of force in the commission of the acts complained of is necessary,[25] and, if the words of the statute descriptive of the acts are "unlawfully and by force," the omission of the word "unlawfully" in the complaint vitiates it.[26] It is not necessary to set out the particular facts constituting a forcible entry or detainer.[27] It is sufficient to follow the language of the statute on which the complaint is based.[28]

§ 43. —— Allegations as to Notice to Quit and Demand for Possession

The authorities agree that, where it is essential to the cause of action, there must be an allegation of notice to quit and demand for possession, but they disagree as to whether the complaint must allege that such notice or demand was written in character. Details as to time and mode of service of notice are not essential to set forth. If a demand is not necessary to the cause of action, none need be alleged.

The complaint must allege notice to quit and demand for possession when necessary to the cause of action, or it will be fatally defective.[29] It has been held unnecessary to allege that the notice to quit was in writing;[30] but there is authority to the contrary.[31] It is not necessary to allege how the notice was served,[32] and, if the fact of the service is distinctly alleged, this allegation will be construed, as against a general demurrer, to include everything necessary to constitute a sufficient service.[33] It is not necessary to allege the exact date at which the notice was given;[34] it is sufficient to allege that, subsequent to the unlawful entry while defendants were in possession and prior to the commencement of the action, the notice to surrender was given and refused for a designated period after the notice was given.[35] It is also unnecessary expressly to state that the demand was made "by the plaintiff."[36] If no demand for possession is necessary, the complaint need not allege a demand,[37] but an allegation of a demand when a demand is unnecessary will not vitiate the complaint.[38]

§ 44. —— Allegations as to Damages

should claim only such damages as are the proximate consequence of the act complained of and no damages may be allowed in excess of those claimed. If there is a statutory form of pleading omitting claim for damages, damages may be recovered without pleading them, and under some statutes exemplary damages may be recovered even when not pleaded.

If the statute authorizes the recovery of damages, under principles discussed infra §§ 58–61, the damages claimed in the complaint must be such as are the natural and proximate consequences of the act complained of,[39] and in no event can damages in a larger sum than that demanded by the complaint be awarded.[40] It is not necessary that the claim should allege a specific sum as damages;[41] but if it does, neither the court nor the jury can find a sum in excess thereof.[42] If no demand for rent is set up in the complaint, rent is not recoverable.[43] However, it is not necessary to allege the value of rents and profits as a basis for the recovery thereof.[44] In some jurisdictions the view is taken that the provisions of the statutes in respect of doubling or trebling damages are mandatory, as stated infra § 60, and, where this view prevails, if the complaint contains proper averments as to damages sustained, it need not ask for the double or treble damages authorized by statute; the court will, on a recovery by plaintiff, double or treble the damages, although double or treble damages were not asked;[45] and it has been held that treble damages are recoverable in a statutory action therefor if the declaration sufficiently states the cause of action and specifically refers, for authority, to the statute allowing the court to treble the damages.[46] On the other hand it has been held that, where the statute is regarded as directory only, double damages will not be allowed unless the claim is made in the complaint.[47] Since a charge of forcible detainer of real property carries an implication that it was from a bad motive, an allegation of forcible detainer is sufficient without more to sustain an award of exemplary damages.[48]

Statutory form of complaint. Where there is a form of pleading provided for by statute and it does not contain an averment or claim for damages, a complaint will be sufficient without an averment or claim for damages.[49]

§ 45. —— Verification, Signature, and Filing

The complaint in an action for forcible entry and detainer should be verified, signed, and filed in compliance with statutory requirements, but, in the absence of statutory requirement, an unverified complaint is sufficient.

In the absence of statute so providing, no verification of the complaint is necessary,[50] but, where the statute requires verification, a failure to comply renders the complaint fatally defective according to some authorities,[51] while other authority is to the effect that such failure does not render the complaint void,[52] and that, in the absence of objection where defendant goes to trial as though the complaint were duly verified, the complaint will be deemed sufficient after judgment.[53] The verification must be made by complainant in the absence of some special statutory provision authorizing verification by some other person.[54] A verification reciting that the complaint is "true in substance" is insufficient,[55] and so is a complaint verified by an agent "to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief,"[56] or a complaint verified on knowledge and on information and belief but not stating which facts are on which basis or giving the sources of

Defect not fatal to jurisdiction
Although the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace cannot be presumed and must appear affirmatively from the record, the absence of an oath to complaint in forcible entry and detainer suit is not fatal to jurisdiction where the party entitled to complain does not object, but, on the contrary, proceeds to trial as though the complaint were duly verified.—Puckett v. information.[57] The complaint may be sworn to before anyone qualified to administer an oath.[58]

Signature. A statutory requirement that the complaint be signed by the party or his attorney is mandatory and noncompliance with this requirement renders the complaint fatally defective.[59] In the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary the complaint may be signed by an agent or attorney;[60] and it has been held that the complaint may be signed by a receiver where the lease to be terminated was itself executed by the receiver.[61]

Filing. A complaint in forcible entry and detainer should be filed in compliance with statutory requirements.[62]

§ 46. —— Amendments

The courts are liberal in the allowance of amendments of complaints in actions for forcible entry and detainer, but none may be permitted where the court lacks the power, as where the complaint fails to invoke its jurisdiction.

In most jurisdictions much liberality is exercised in allowing amendments in proceedings of the character under consideration,[63] especially where it appears to be reasonably clear that full justice may not be done without such amendments.[64] This rule, however, is inapplicable where the court lacks power to permit the amendment, as in the case of a jurisdictional defect.[65]

Time and terms. It has been said: "It is hardly ever too late to amend pleadings, whether before or after verdict, on such terms as justice may seem to demand."[66] When seasonably requested proper amendments should be allowed as of course without the imposition of terms.[67]

Amendments permissible. While amendments which change the cause of action will not be permitted,[68] amendments which do not change substantially the cause of action will ordinarily be allowed.[69] The following have been held to be permissible amendments: Correcting or adding to the description of the property;[70] changing the date on which the forcible entry was alleged to be committed;[71] increasing the amount of damages;[72] alleging certain specified sums as special damages and claiming punitive damages for vindictiveness;[73] showing that the land was situated in the county in which suit was brought,[74] or in the precinct where suit was brought, where the complaint contains a sufficient description of the premises from which it could have been shown that they were in such precinct;[75] showing that plaintiff at the time of the entry was in peaceable possession;[76] correcting contradictory statements as to possession;[77] showing that plaintiff's attorney made the affidavit and that his name which did not appear on the complaint was omitted by mistake;[78] changing a complaint in an action for forcible entry and detainer which alleges an unlawful entry so as to allege an unlawful and forcible entry;[79] curing misjoinder of causes of action;[80] conforming pleadings to proof;[81] excluding matters over which a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction;[82] verifying the complaint.[83]

§ 47. Plea, Answer, or Cross-Complaint

The necessity for a written plea or answer by defendant in an action for forcible entry and detainer depends on the circumstances of the case as governed by statute. Where such a plea or answer is required, the plea of "not guilty", akin to that of the general issue, ordinarily suffices except where special matter is involved, which should be specially pleaded. It has been held that no cross-complaint may be interposed in an action for unlawful detainer.

The necessity of written pleadings on the part of a defendant in actions for forcible entry and detainer is controlled largely by the provisions of the statutes as applied to the circumstances revealed. Under the practice prevailing, it has been variously held that there is no need for a written plea or answer,[84] as under statutes prescribing a form for a complaint in unlawful entry and detainer proceedings on the filing of which the cause is at issue without further pleading,[85] that a written plea or answer is required only where defendant sets up new matter in excuse, justification, or avoidance,[86] or that in the absence of contrary statute a written plea or answer is essential,[87] and that unless filed it is error to swear the jury to try the matter in difference between the parties because there is no issue.[88] Where a complaint is amended after demurrer has been sustained thereto, and an amended complaint is filed, defendant must plead to the complaint as amended.[89] Under a statute providing that defendant shall file with the clerk his written answer, demurrer, or demurrer and answer, defendant does not waive his right to answer by demurring without answer at the same time.[90] The statute of limitations, if available as a defense, under principles discussed supra § 33, must be taken advantage of by plea, and is not good matter for demurrer to the complaint.[91]

Sufficiency. If the answer does not deny the material allegations of the complaint and no material new matter is set up, no issue is raised and plaintiff is entitled to judgment on the pleadings.[92] Except where it is otherwise provided by statute,[93] the plea of not guilty puts in issue all material allegations of the complaint and is in general sufficient;[94] and a special plea setting up matter available under the plea of not guilty is bad on demurrer,[95] and may properly be stricken on the court's own motion.[96] Matter in abatement[97] and new matter by way of excuse, justification, or avoidance[98] must be specially pleaded, unless the necessity therefor is dispensed with by statute, as explained below. By the express provisions of some statutes, however, a general denial will be sufficient in all cases,[99] even in respect of matters of excuse, justification, or avoidance.[1] Where an entry by fraud and stealth is alleged, an answer alleging an entry with plaintiff's consent is good.[2] A denial that defendant entered unlawfully admits the entry and tenders issue only on its unlawfulness.[3] An allegation in the answer of actual possession raises no question of title[4] and an allegation of right to possession is a conclusion of law.[5] An answer which alleges that defendant purchased the property in controversy from a person named, but which does not show that such person had any interest in the premises or right to dispose thereof or of the possession, fails to show that his entry was based on any claim of right.[6] Where the complaint alleged that defendant forcibly entered on a tract of land described, an answer admitting the taking and holding of possession, but denying that he did so forcibly, unlawfully, or wrongfully, did not tender any issue as to the legality of defendant's entry.[7] Where an abstract of title is set up in a paragraph of the complaint in compliance with a statutory requirement, defendant's failure to deny this paragraph does not admit its truth where the answer denies plaintiff's title or right to possession.[8] If the allegations in the complaint are stated conjunctively, an answer which denies them in that form does not raise an issue,[9] and any defense distinctly and separately stated must be an answer to the whole cause of action.[10] If plaintiff regains possession of the premises pending an appeal by defendant to a court of record this fact can be taken advantage of only by a plea puis darrien continuance.[11]

Cross-complaint. Under statutes limiting defendant in an unlawful detainer action to an answer or demurrer, a cross-complaint may not be interposed.[12]

§ 48. Reply

Under the practice prevailing in some jurisdictions it has been held that no reply or subsequent pleading should be interposed.

By virtue of statutory provisions in some jurisdictions it is not necessary in an action for unlawful detainer to reply to affirmative matter contained in the answer,[13] and under the practice prevailing in some jurisdictions replications or replies and subsequent pleadings are improper in an action for forcible entry and detainer or for unlawful detainer.[14] Where the unlawful detainer act requires a written complaint and answer, it by implication excludes the necessity of any further written pleadings.[15]

§ 49. Method of Raising Objections and Waiver

The general rules applicable to pleading, and to pleadings in the court of a justice of the peace, apply to the method of raising objections to pleadings in an action for forcible entry and detainer, or the like, and to waiver of such objections.

In actions in unlawful detainer before justices of the peace, no replication is required.—Babnik v. Culig, 3 P.2d 801, 89 Colo. 449.

Replications, rejoinders, and surrejoinders are improper in an action for unlawful entry and detainer where the statute provides for a complaint and under such statute the cause is at issue on the filing of the complaint.—Holmes v. Elmer, 181 So. 325, 182 Miss. 171.

§ 50. Issues, Proof, and Variance

a. In general
b. Conformity of pleadings and proof
c. Variance

a. In General

Generally speaking, the issues in a suit for forcible entry and detainer are the actual possession of the plaintiff and his forcible ouster by the defendant, and the plaintiff must prove both. In a suit for detainer only, it is not necessary for plaintiff to prove his own possession.

Generally speaking, the issues in a suit for forcible entry and detainer are whether the tenant was in actual, peaceful, and physical possession of the premises,[39] and whether defendant forcibly took such possession from him.[40] Under a plea of not guilty, plaintiff must prove every fact necessary to entitle him to recover,[41] for, as stated supra § 47, where the plea of not guilty is proper all material

Throwing burden on plaintiff

In an action for forcible entry and detainer, the plea of "not guilty," which is similar to the general issue ordinarily used in civil actions, casts on plaintiff the burden of proving allegations of the complaint are put in issue by such plea.

In an action for forcible entry and detainer or the like, plaintiff must prove allegations of his actual, prior possession of the premises,[42] and defendant's invasion thereof;[43] but it is sufficient for plaintiff to show his peaceable possession and his forcible ejectment by defendant,[44] and he need not go further and show his right to possession.[45] In an action for forcible detainer, as distinguished from one for entry and detainer, it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to show his possession or that defendant secured possession from plaintiff.[46]

Possession of defendant. While the possession of defendant at the time of suit is ordinarily not an issue, where it is in issue under the facts of the case plaintiff must show that defendant was in possession of the premises at the time of suit.[47]

Notice to quit. It has been held unnecessary to allege that a notice to defendant to quit was in writing, as shown supra § 43, but it has also been held that on the trial such fact must be proved.[48]

Refusal to surrender premises on demand. If the answer admits refusal to deliver possession pursuant to plaintiff's demand, plaintiff need not prove this fact.[49]

b. Conformity of Pleadings and Proof

The usual rules respecting conformity of pleadings and evidence apply in actions for forcible entry and detainer. Under a general denial defendant may introduce evidence of anything tending to disprove plaintiff's case.

As in other actions, plaintiff in his evidence is confined to proof of the facts alleged in his complaint.[50] Under a statute which provides but one form of declaration, namely, that it summon defendant to answer the complaint, the fact that defendant is in possession and unlawfully withholds from plaintiff the premises in question, and evidence of forcible entry by defendant, which is unlawful, is admissible thereunder, without specific allegation thereof.[51] Under a complaint charging defendant with obtaining possession by collusion with plaintiff's tenant, evidence negativing the averment of collusion is competent, and its competency is in no way affected by the fact of plaintiff's presence or absence when defendant obtained possession.[52] If suit is brought against defendants jointly, testimony is admissible to show that they occupied the tract in severalty.[53]

Under a general denial in an unlawful detainer case defendant is not limited to showing matters specially pleaded but may give evidence of anything tending to disprove the right of plaintiff to recover.[54] It has been held, however, that under a general denial defendant may not show the relationship of the parties so as to prove that plaintiff had no right to possession.[55]

c. Variance

In actions for forcible entry and detainer, as in civil actions generally, the plaintiff must prove his case as laid and a material variance is fatal, such as one in respect of the description of the land. The authorities are not in harmony as to the necessity of proving the time of the defendant's entry as alleged.

Under general rules there must be a substantial conformity between plaintiff's allegations and his proof.[56] If the complaint alleges forcible entry only, there can be no recovery on proof making out a case of forcible detainer only.[57] Proof of some other statutory case not set out in the complaint will not sustain the action.[58] While any of the

Specially pleading lease and justifying possession on other grounds

In an action in forcible entry and detainer by a receiver appointed in action to foreclose a mortgage, where the answer contained a general denial, and pleaded as a further defense that defendant was in possession under a lease from the administratrix of the estate in which the title to the land stood, defendant was not limited to the lease in justifying his retention of possession, but might also assert a right of possession as heir of deceased mortgagor.—Ruff v. species of actions of entry or detainer may be prosecuted under the single form of warrant specified by an applicable statute, if plaintiff does not follow the prescribed form, which is comprehensive, but uses his own form, then he is confined to the particular action which he sets forth and can recover only on proof of facts supporting such particular action.[59]

Description of land. A material variance between pleading and proof in respect of the description of the land is fatal to a recovery.[60]

Plaintiff's possession. Where there is no proof to sustain an allegation of actual possession by plaintiff, a judgment for defendant is proper.[61] A complaint charging that plaintiff was in possession of certain premises is not sustained by evidence that he was in possession of only a portion thereof, and a recovery is not authorized.[62]

Defendant's possession and detention. As respects possession by defendant of the premises in controversy, evidence that plaintiff was in possession of a very small portion will be deemed an immaterial variance.[63] In the absence of evidence showing that defendant wrongfully withholds possession from plaintiff, the latter may not recover.[64] A variance in the pleading and proof as to the amount of land charged to be detained has been held immaterial and a recovery allowed of so much as the jury found was detained.[65] Proof of an unlawful entry does not support an allegation of detention by force.[66]

Where the complaint charges that defendant's possession was forcibly obtained and held, the test of plaintiff's right to recover is the character of the entry and detention.[67]

Time of entry. According to some decisions the allegation of time of the entry is material and the date must be proved as alleged;[68] but according to the weight of authority it is not necessary to prove the time of entry exactly as alleged.[69] As long as the proof shows an entry before filing complaint,[70] and that the entry was made within the period in which suits for forcible entry and detainer must be brought to avoid the bar of the statute of limitation, a variance between the time alleged and that proved is immaterial.[71]

I. PROCEEDINGS FOR TAKING AND DELIVERY OF POSSESSION

Under statutes providing for the issuance of a writ of restitution on the commencement of an action for forcible entry or detainer, it has been held that the action is deemed to begin on the filing of the complaint in so far as issuance of such writ is concerned. Where the writ fails, a new or alias writ may be issued by the clerk without further application to the court if there has been no change in conditions.

Under a statute broadly providing that plaintiff, at the time of commencing an action of forcible entry or detainer, or at any time thereafter, may apply for a writ of restitution restoring to plaintiff the property described in the complaint, it has been held that for the purpose of issuing the writ the action is to be deemed to be commenced when the complaint is filed,[72] and that the statute does not require service of defendant with process before the writ can issue.[73]

72. Wash.—Hughes v. Crowley, 5 P. 2d 982, 165 Wash. 580.

73. Wash.—Hughes v. Crowley, supra.

Where an issued writ of restitution fails to accomplish its purpose for a reason other than a change of conditions, it is not necessary to present another application for a new writ,[74] and in the absence of a change of conditions the clerk, as an officer of the court, has inherent power on failure of the original writ to issue as many aliases as may be necessary fully to accomplish the authorized purpose;[75] but where the writ fails on a change of conditions, there should be another application for issuance of a new writ.[76]

§ 52. Bond

The purpose of a bond executed on issuance of a writ of restitution giving possession of the premises to plaintiff, in a suit for entry or detainer, is to protect defendant as to damages arising from his summary eviction in the event that it is eventually proved that such eviction was not justified, and in a separate action on the bond its obligee may recover for damages proximately resulting from his dispossession. Attorneys' fees are ordinarily not a proper item of damage in such suits.

Under some statutes plaintiff may give a bond and dispossess defendant at the commencement of the action.[77] The purpose of a bond, written on issuance of a writ of restitution, is to enable plaintiff in the detainer action to obtain possession of the premises and to protect defendant in his right of possession, if any, by indemnifying him for damage sustained by reason of the issuance of the writ if it is proved that it was unlawfully issued,[78] and where damages are sought they should be recovered in a separate action on the bond.[79] Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter, the bond is binding and recovery may be had for damages sustained from its breach, even though the court may have failed to obtain jurisdiction over the person because of faulty proceedings.[80] Under a statute providing that, before a writ of possession in an action of forcible entry or unlawful detainer shall be executed by an officer, plaintiff shall execute to the officer having the writ a bond with sufficient surety, an action will lie for breach of the bond even though the original action in which the bond was given was not prosecuted to final judgment, and an action on the bond will not be precluded by delay in prosecution of the original action.[81]

Damages. In an action on the bond written on issuance of a writ of restitution or possession, the person deprived of the premises unlawfully is entitled to all resultant damages up to the amount of the bond.[82] The extent of the damages is a question of fact for determination by the trial court;[83] but the party dispossessed is entitled only to such damages as result proximately from the wrongful dispossession,[84] and where a house on the premises is burned during the period of dispossession either from accidental causes or from willful act of some person other than defendant, or the latter's tenant in possession, plaintiff may not recover any damages for loss of the house.[85] Where it appears that, in their defense to a forcible detention action, defendants in such action did not ask to be restored to possession of the premises but acquiesced in the proceeding in so far as it sought to determine their right of possession, deprivation of the use of the premises was not an element of damages recoverable in an action on the bond given on issuance of the writ of restitution to plaintiff who was put into possession under the writ.[86] In an action on the bond it has been held that no recovery may be had for attorney's fees incurred in defense of the action in detainer,[87] nor for those incurred in prosecution

New bond on renewal of writ. Where a new or alias writ is issued without change of conditions, the failure of the original writ of restitution does not require issuance of a new bond.[89]

J. EVIDENCE

§ 53. Burden of Proof and Presumptions

The burden rests on plaintiff to prove all essential elements of his case under the statute under which he sues, such as his actual, prior possession of the premises and defendant's entry or detainer, and its forcible or unlawful character. Defendant need introduce no evidence until plaintiff has put in his case, but has the burden of proving an affirmative defense.

In actions for forcible entry and detainer, and the like, the plaintiff carries the burden of proof[90] and must show all facts essential to his recovery under the particular statute involved,[91] such as plaintiff's actual prior possession of the premises,[92] and defendant's entry[93] or detainer[94] by force,[95] within the period of limitations,[96] and that defendant unlawfully withholds possession of the land in controversy.[97] Where the possession of the premises by defendant at the time of commencing suit is in issue, the burden rests on plaintiff to prove this fact.[98] To authorize a recovery plaintiff must prove the giving of such notice[99] or the making of such demand for the surrender of the premises[1] as is required by statute, and must show that defendant refused to or neglected to surrender possession, and the latter fact is not to be presumed from the fact of defendant's possession before the demand.[2] Consent to defendant's possession will not be presumed from plaintiff's silence for any period shorter than designated by the statute of limitations.[3] If damages are claimed he must offer evidence in support of the claim.[4] If plaintiff relies on the possession of another, the burden is on him to show that the latter was his tenant.[5]

Description of premises. Plaintiff must give in evidence such a description of the premises in question as will enable the court to describe them in its judgment with such accuracy that an officer with the writ issued pursuant thereto could locate such premises and enforce the writ.[6]

Burden not sustained by presumptions

Where plaintiff, who was seeking to prove that defendants were in possession of the premises unlawfully, relied on presumptions that they had obtained possession by virtue of a deed of an administratrix, at a sale of the property in the probate court to pay debts of deceased owner of the land and that such deed was void for failure to make a judgment creditor of decedent a party thereto, the court, in holding that plaintiff had not sustained the burden of proving defendant's possession unlawful, denied existence of either presumption that plaintiff relied on, where it held that the presumption that possessors hold by deed in probate sale does not arise in absence of proof of lack of possession prior to deed, and that no presumption arises that possessors' deed in probate sale to pay debts is void for failure to make judgment creditor a party thereto.—Hooper v. Buvidas, 239 Ill.App. 596.

cation of the premises the burden is on plaintiff to prove that the property occupied by defendant is the property described in plaintiff's complaint.[7]

Plaintiff's right to possession. Where the right to possession becomes material, the actual and peaceable possession of property raises a presumption that the occupants are in rightful possession, and the burden of proof is on plaintiff suing in forcible detainer to overcome such presumption.[8] It is necessary for plaintiff to establish his right of possession.[9] He cannot rely on lack of right of possession in defendant.[10]

Defendant's burden. The defendant is not required to offer any proof until plaintiff by the weight of his evidence has shifted the burden of defense on defendant;[11] but he has the burden of proving an affirmative defense.[12] If defendant seeks to justify his possession under the authority of some other person than plaintiff the burden is on him to prove the title of such person,[13] and where the only way in which defendant can prove his right to present possession is under the terms of a lease, it is incumbent on defendant to prove his right by introducing the lease into evidence, and if the evidence is insufficient to show the terms of the purported lease defendant does not sustain his burden.[14]

Undefended action. Under the provisions of some statutes plaintiff must prove the allegations of his complaint whether defendant appears and defends or not.[15]

Burden of proof in actions by purchasers at judicial sales. Where the benefit of forcible detainer statutes is extended to purchasers at judicial sales after the time for redemption has expired, under principles considered in the C.J.S. title Judicial Sales § 43, also 35 C.J. p 86 notes 37–39, and 26 C.J. p 832 notes 36–41, plaintiff must show that his purchase conformed to the law authorizing the officer to sell;[16] and for this purpose it is not sufficient merely to introduce the deed,[17] but he must produce a valid judgment and execution as well as a deed for the premises on a sale by the officer under the judgment,[18] since this constitutes the evidence that the land has been sold and not redeemed.[19] When defendant in forcible detainer is a stranger to the judgment under which the land was sold, it must be shown that the party in possession holds the land in subordination to the title or possession of the judgment debtor,[20] and that his right to the possession was acquired by him subsequent to the lien of the judgment under which the land was sold.[21] An action cannot be maintained under this statute without the introduction in evidence, at the trial, of the grantee's deed, in order to show not only the extent of his possession, but also his right to the possession.[22]

§ 54. Admissibility

General rules govern the admissibility of evidence in proceedings of the character under consideration. Questions as to the admissibility of evidence on issues of title and possession are considered infra § 55, and questions as to the admissibility of evidence as to other matters, infra § 56.

§ 55. —— Title and Possession

a. Title
b. Possession

a. Title

In actions for forcible entry and detainer, evidence of title is ordinarily inadmissible where offered for the purpose of securing an adjudication of title and not for any collateral matter.

Inasmuch as the question of title cannot be adjudicated unless the statutes expressly so provide, as explained supra § 6, evidence offered for the purpose of showing title to the premises is ordinarily inadmissible.[23] Thus documents are inadmis-

Lease

In action for forcible entry and detainer by county against discharged warden occupying house in sible to show adverse title in defendant,[24] and defendant cannot show title in a third person;[25] but where evidence of title is not offered for the purpose of determining contradictory title claims, it may be admissible for the purpose of clarifying other rights of the parties,[26] such as the right, character, and extent of possession, as shown infra subdivision b of this section.

b. Possession

(1) In general
(2) Character and extent of possession
(3) Right to possession

(1) In General

The general rules govern admissibility of evidence as to the possession of plaintiff or defendant.

Broadly speaking, all otherwise competent, relevant, and material evidence is admissible in an action for forcible entry and detainer where it sheds light on the fact of possession,[27] and evidence as to possession must be competent, relevant, and material.[28]

Evidence concerning the possession of the locus in quo must, to be relevant, be such as to connect the party asserting such possession with the actual possession at the time of the alleged forcible entry.[29] On the question of plaintiff's possession of the premises at the time of the acts complained of it is competent to show that a third person had left personal property on the premises with plaintiff's permission;[30] that plaintiff had instructed his agent to take possession of the premises on the removal of his tenant;[31] and that plaintiff had entered upon the land and cut timber on it.[32] It is also competent to show a written agreement of a party to deliver peaceable possession to plaintiff,[33] the execution of a lease by plaintiff to a third person,[34] a preliminary injunction against defendant issued in a former suit between the same parties concerning the same property,[35] and a recovery in trespass by plaintiff for injuries to the land in controversy;[36] and plaintiff may be permitted to prove payment of taxes by one under whom he claims, for the purpose of showing that the claim and possession of the lattter are in good faith.[37] It has been held that declarations of a person in possession of land showing that he held in his own right and not as tenant or agent of another are admissible as evidence on the principle of res gestæ;[38] but there is authority to the contrary.[39] To show that plaintiff was not in possession at the time of the alleged in-convict camp, evidence of title being irrelevant, proof of lease to defendant from alleged owner and lessor to plaintiff was held improperly admitted under code provisions precluding inquiry into the merits of title in such actions.—Jefferson County v. Parker, 100 So. 338, 211 Ala. 289—26 C.J. p 857 note 9 [b].

27. Ala.—Washington v. Spriggs, 105 So. 811, 213 Ala. 622.

Relation of parties

All evidence of relations of parties shedding light on actual possession at time of bringing suit is admissible.—Washington v. Spriggs, supra.

Deeds bearing on possession

(1) Generally.—Conroy v. Duane, 45 Cal. 597—26 C.J. p 858 note 24 [a].

(2) Where plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show possession by C at the time of the alleged forcible entry, a deed of the premises from C to plaintiff dated one month prior to the entry has been held admissible to show that at the time of the entry the apparent possession by C was the possession of plaintiff.—Morgan v. Higgins, 37 Cal. 59.

(3) A deed offered to show right of possession was not inadmissible because unrecorded until after filing of the complaint, where it was executed before institution of the suit; nor was it inadmissible because no copy of the deed was filed with the complaint, the statute not so requiring in the case of a suit for unlawful entry and detainer.—Huff v. Murray, 158 So. 475, 171 Miss. 656.

jury defendant may introduce in evidence an agreement of plaintiff to quit possession.[40]

To show possession by defendant at the time of the injury complained of he may introduce evidence that he had been in possession for two years under a lease at the time of the alleged forcible entry; that he had not surrendered possession but had leased the premises for the succeeding year;[41] or a record of a judgment in defendant's favor in an action of trespass for injuries to the premises in question.[42] The declaration of a person, since deceased, made at the time of such occupation, that he held the house under defendant as a tenant, is admissible,[43] and a witness may testify that he controlled the lands in controversy for defendant while he was absent during war.[44] For the purpose of showing possession in himself, defendant may show that a former owner of the land in question under which he claimed title had been in undisputed possession at one time during his ownership and within a designated time before the commission of the acts complained of.[45] Where defendants put in evidence the possession of one under whom they claimed, it was proper for plaintiffs to show that such person took possession under a lease from them.[46] A writ of possession issued in a former action between the same parties for the same lands awarding defendant possession of a portion of the premises is not admissible where the possession of such portion is not questioned.[47] Proof of payment of taxes on the property by defendant,[48] or payment of rent to the person from whom he claims to derive his claim of possession,[49] or that defendant had for two years past been in actual possession of a large tract of land which originally included the land in controversy, none of the tract mentioned being shown to be contiguous to the land in question,[50] is not admissible to show possession on the part of defendant. On an issue whether defendants forcibly entered a disputed strip of land between them and adjoining proprietors, evidence that an entry had been made prior to the alleged entry mentioned, in the complaint, under an agreement to establish the line by a survey, is admissible on the question of who was in possession at the time of the alleged entry.[51]

(2) Character and Extent of Possession

Evidence of title is admissible to show the character and extent of possession.

While the validity of titles cannot be tried in proceedings of the character under consideration, as discussed supra § 6, deeds or other evidences of title are admissible to show the character or extent of the possession claimed,[52] provided evidence has been given of actual possession of the land or a part of it,[53] and provided the possession has been peaceably obtained,[54] but not otherwise.[55] To show the character of the possession relied on by plaintiff defendant may show that he had held prior possession and that plaintiff had taken possession by force during defendant's absence and sought to maintain it by force.[56] He cannot, however, for the purpose of showing that plaintiff had only a scrambling possession, introduce evidence to show that during the whole period of plaintiff's possession third persons with whom defendant was not in privity were stopping near the demised premises awaiting an opportunity to take possession when they could do so without force.[57]

Evidence of title is admissible only to prove the right, character, or extent of possession,[58] and, where a deed has been admitted for this purpose, testimony that the grantor had been working the land is irrelevant as drawing the attention of the jury to the question of title rather than possession.[59] It is error to admit a deed which on its face does not show the boundaries of the land intended to be embraced therein or with certainty and definiteness describe any land, especially where no promise is made by the party proffering such deed to follow it up and connect it with other evidence which would make it material and relevant.[60] The draft of a lease unexecuted by the lessor is not competent evidence in behalf of plaintiff who is the lessee named therein and who has signed it to prove the extent of the land claimed by him.[61]

Evidence of staking a claim is admissible to show the extent of plaintiff's possession in the same manner as a deed would be.[62]

(3) Right to Possession

Deeds or other evidence of title may be admissible as bearing on the right to possession, as may other evidence.

Although very few of the statutes authorize or permit determination of title, as shown supra § 6, yet in proceedings based on such of the statutes as recognize that the right to possession is involved, under principles discussed supra § 7, evidence of title is admissible to establish this right,[63] as is also any other evidence concerning the source of plaintiff's claim and right to the possession of the premises.[64] On the other hand, where plaintiff introduces evidence of title to establish his right to possession, defendant may introduce evidence to show the invalidity of the conveyance[65] or will[66] under which plaintiff claims, and a writ of possession in favor of defendant from a court of competent jurisdiction is admissible proof of the lawfulness of his possession without producing the whole record.[67]

§ 56. —— Other Matters

a. In general
b. Identification and location of premises
c. Entry and use of force
d. Demand and notice thereof

a. In General

The general rules govern admissibility of evidence in actions for forcible entry and detainer and the like, and under such rules the court may exclude evidence of occupation of lands other than those involved or as to the character of the house kept by the plaintiff or of other matters irrelevant to the action.

Under the general rules governing admissibility of evidence in civil actions, evidence in actions for forcible entry and detainer, or the like, has been held admissible[68] or inadmissible.[69] Evidence that plaintiff had conveyed an interest in land to which he makes no claim is not admissible,[70] nor is evidence as to how the parties held and occupied other lands claimed by plaintiff in the neighborhood.[71]

Corporate books

If a corporation brings an action of unlawful detainer against an ex-officer thereof for possession of a house allowed him as residence while in office, the books of the corporation are admissible to show the arrangement made between the parties.—Frazier v. Virginia Military Inst., 81 Va. 59.

Evidence of sales contract admissible for defendant

Where plaintiff sued defendant in forcible entry and detainer, and on the trial it appeared that defendant vendor had peaceably entered when the manager of the vendee's assignee placed the vendor's representative in possession of the premises and accepted employment as manager under the vendor, the entry was not "forcible," and where possession was taken under a sales contract the entry and detention were not "unlawful," and consequently evidence of the sales contract and defaults thereunder were admissible when offered by defendant, as against plaintiff's contention that neither title nor right to possession are admissible in actions of forcible entry and detainer, the rule urged by plaintiff being inapplicable because no forcible entry or detainer had been shown.—Baxley v. Western Loan & Building Co., 27 P.2d 387, 135 Cal.App. 426.

69. Fla.—Harrell v. Martin, 158 So. 287, 117 Fla. 754.

Writ of restitution

In forcible entry and detainer proceeding, admission of writ of restitution with return of sheriff thereon ousting defendant from possession of property was error, where there was no showing that writ was based on valid judgment, since validity of judgment could not be assumed, and accordingly no sufficient predicate had been laid for introduction of the writ into evidence.—Harrell v. Martin, supra.

70. Ind T.—Anderson v. Thomas, 47 S.W. 301, 2 Ind.T. 79.

71. Mo.—Balch v. Myers, 65 Mo.App. 422.

Evidence as to the character of the house kept by plaintiff is irrelevant.[72] In an action for wrongful eviction under writ of restitution by the heirs of a mortgagor against the mortgagee, testimony tending to show that the mortgagee entertained malice toward such heirs several months after the eviction in suit was inadmissible.[73] Where the defense is that the entry was made after plaintiff's abandonment of the premises, evidence that it was originally taken by plaintiff's agent and so held is not admissible.[74] If one sues the owner of an adjoining lot for forcible entry and detainer of a narrow strip of ground between their lots, the title to which was in dispute, evidence as to the use of a fence erected thereon many years before is immaterial.[75] Where the fact that a previous suit had been brought for the property has no bearing on the forcible entry or on the title to the land in controversy, it is irrelevant.[76]

b. Identification and Location of Premises

Any competent evidence is admissible which is relevant and material to identification or location of the premises.

Where the identification of the premises is in issue, it is proper to admit evidence that plaintiff owns no other property in the same locality if such evidence has a bearing on identification,[77] and this is true even though such evidence may also bear on the matter of title, which ordinarily is not in issue in actions of this character.[78] The complaint on which the original writ was issued by the justice may be looked to by the court in aid of the description of the premises contained in the writ.[79] An objection to the introduction of any evidence which seeks to challenge the sufficiency of the description of the property sought to be recovered is properly overruled, if the description as to a portion of the property is correct.[80]

c. Entry and Use of Force

Any competent evidence is admissible to show the entry where relevant and material to such issue. Declarations and threats by or on behalf of defendant are competent on the issue of force.

In an action for forcible entry, evidence that defendant remained in possession of the premises is admissible to show that he made his entry complete, although he may not be charged with forcible detainer.[81] It is competent to show that plaintiff was arrested at defendant's instance for the purpose of getting him away from the premises so that defendant might enter and take possession.[82] Evidence to show good faith in an entry is not admissible, the question of good or bad faith not affecting the right of recovery.[83] Evidence that defendants had expended large sums of money in improvements upon the premises is not admissible on the issue as to whether there had been an unlawful entry.[84]

Force. Declarations of defendant's agent while taking possession are competent on the question of force,[85] and so are threats of bodily harm and the character of defendant for violence.[86] In actions for forcible entry evidence of force employed to maintain possession is not admissible to characterize by relation acts otherwise peaceable by which possession was previously obtained.[87] Records of other suits between other parties with respect to the property are prima facie irrelevant on the question of forcible entry.[88] Evidence that plaintiff's lessor had forcibly evicted defendant from the premises five days previous to defendant's forcible entry is not admissible in justification of the latter.[89]

d. Demand and Notice Thereof

Demand for possession may be proved by any competent evidence, but parol proof of service of a written notice of demand is inadmissible without prior notice to defendant to produce the original. Service of notice should be proved by the testimony of the person effecting such service, or the personal testimony of another having knowledge of the facts, and ordinarily may not be proved by an indorsement on the paper.

It has been held that testimony of plaintiff's agents is admissible to show their demand for possession.[90] Where the delivery of a written notice

Error to exclude
In action for forcible entry and unlawful detainer by county to recover possession of house from form-of demand is essential to maintain the action, as discussed supra § 23, parol proof thereof is inadmissible without a prior notice to defendant to produce the original,[91] but there is some authority to the contrary.[92] Service cannot be proved by an indorsement on the original paper either by a private person[93] or an officer,[94] whether sworn or not, especially where the officer was not authorized to serve notice.[95] A person who serves the notice or some other person who has knowledge that such service was made should be called to prove such facts.[96] It may, however, be established by admissions of defendant.[97] Where evidence of threats by defendant warning plaintiff to keep off the premises was admitted to show that defendant was holding by force and defendant had admitted that he had threatened plaintiff with a prosecution for trespass if he entered the premises, such evidence was admissible as dispensing with other further proof by plaintiff of a demand for possession before bringing suit.[98]

e. Damages

In proving damages, evidence of injury to the freehold is ordinarily inadmissible, but evidence of rental values may be admissible, such as evidence of the location and surrounding conditions.

Evidence of injury committed by the disseizor to the freehold is ordinarily held to be incompetent as indicating plaintiff's damages in an action of forcible entry and detainer.[99] It has been held admissible to look to the title in view of the question of damages or rent to be recovered in an action brought by a mere intruder against the wrongful owner of the land or where claimant by fraud induces another to take a lease or to enter under him upon a false representation as to his title.[1] In such cases the title may be looked to on the question whether the case made out constitutes in law a wrongful entry or detainer.[2] In determining the rental value of premises, the peculiar location and conditions surrounding them may be shown and considered;[3] but evidence as to what profits might be expected if the premises wrongfully withheld had been available to plaintiff for use in connection with other property is not competent to prove the fair rental value.[4]

§ 57. Weight and Sufficiency

The general rules applicable to evidence in civil actions govern the weight and sufficiency of evidence in actions for forcible entry or detainer, as with respect to such matters as the plaintiff's possession or right of possession and his demand for surrender of the premises, and as to the defendant's entry or detainer and the forcible or unlawful character thereof. The plaintiff must prove his case by a preponderance of the evidence.

The rules relating to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in forcible entry and detainer actions are the same as those in other civil actions,[5] and plaintiff must prove his case by a preponderance of the evidence;[6] but a preponderance is sufficient.[7] Under such general rules the evidence in particular actions of forcible entry and detainer or the like, under the decisions, has been held sufficient [8]

Two or more defendants
(1) Evidence held to support judgment that one defendant was guilty of forcible detainer but not that another was so guilty.—Paxton v. Fisher, 45 P.2d 903, 86 Utah 408.

(2) Evidence held to support plaintiff's judgment of forcible entry and detainer as to one defendant and not as to another defendant charged to authorize recovery by plaintiff or insufficient[9] to authorize recovery by plaintiff; or sufficient or insufficient to show particular matters,[10] such as plaintiff's possession of the premises,[11] which must be shown by proof of physical facts and not by mere public rumor;[12] or has been held sufficient or insufficient to show the fact of entry by defendant,[13] or a detention of the premises by him,[14] or to show the employment of force,[15] as in effecting an entry[16] or in maintaining a detention;[17] or to show the unlawful character of defendant's entry or detainer;[18] or to show defendant's possession of the premises at commencement of the suit;[19] or to

10. Defendant's knowledge of plaintiff's rights in public land

In a forcible entry and detainer proceeding for a tract of public land, evidence held sufficient to show that defendant took possession with notice that plaintiff corporation was the owner of the improvements and in constructive possession of the premises, although in any event defendant's good faith would have afforded no defense.—Willows Cattle Co. v. Connell, 220 P. 1082, 25 Ariz. 592.

Identification of property

Evidence held to sustain finding in unlawful detainer that property described in trust deed as north half of lot 5 was same tract which defendants occupied and refused to give up, although designated as lot 4 on plat dealing with adjacent lots.—Miller v. Halleran, 270 S.W. 427, 219 Mo. App. 195.

Relationship of parties

In unlawful detainer action, evidence held to sustain finding relation of landlord and tenant did not exist.—Richardson v. King, 10 P.2d 323, 51 Idaho 762.

Want of good faith

Evidence held sufficient to show defendant's caprice and want of good faith.—Nichols v. Eustis, 131 N.Y.S. 265, 146 App.Div. 475.

11. At time of entry

(1) Evidence held sufficient to show plaintiff's possession of the premises at time of entry.—McCormick v. McDowell, 90 S.W. 541, 121 Ky. 832—26 C.J. p 861 note 95 [j].

(2) Evidence held insufficient to show plaintiff's possession at time of entry.—Bush v. Thomas, 50 So. 133, 162 Ala. 168—26 C.J. p 862 note 96 [e] (1).

Five days' peaceable and undisturbed possession

(1) Evidence held sufficient to show that plaintiff was in the peaceable and undisturbed possession of the land for a period of five days next preceding defendant's entry.—Randolph v. Husch, 294 P. 236, 159 Wash. 490—Sunday v. Moore, 237 P. 1014, 135 Wash. 414.

(2) Evidence held to support finding that plaintiff was not in peaceable possession of premises at time defendant went into possession, nor at any time within five days next preceding that date, within Remington Comp.St. § 811.—Hager v. Parcher, 240 P. 924, 136 Wash. 518.

K. DAMAGES AND COSTS

§ 58. Right to Damages

Plaintiff or defendant, if successful in the action, is entitled to recover damages only to the extent that such a recovery is authorized by statute.

The action being purely statutory, the right to recover damages of either plaintiff or defendant depends on the language of the statute which creates the remedy.[24] In the absence of some statutory provision expressly authorizing it, damages cannot be recovered by plaintiff;[25] nor is defendant, although an action of unlawful detainer is decided in favor of him, entitled to an inquest of damages.[26] Under some statutory provisions, however, a successful plaintiff may be awarded damages in actions of this character,[27] unless he has waived his right thereto.[28] However, damages can be allowed plaintiff only as an incident to the right of possession,[29] and if there is no claim to recover possession[30] or no recovery of possession[31] there can be no award of damages, a claim for which must be asserted in an ordinary civil action.[32] Under some statutory provisions also, if defendant in forcible detainer disputes plaintiff's right to possession, he may prove his damages,[33] and on a verdict in his favor the court should render judgment for damages assessed against plaintiff and his sureties,[34] but this rule does not apply where defendant is in possession without right, and plaintiff's failure to recover is due entirely to his seeking relief by the wrong form of action.[35] If defendant is ousted from possession of only part of the premises he is not entitled to recover damages for the detention of the whole.[36]

§ 59. Measure and Elements of Damages

The damages recoverable are such as are the natural and proximate result of the acts complained of, and usually involve the elements of loss of rents, loss of all or part of a crop, the expense of protecting the property, and, under some statutes, waste. In a proper case exemplary damages may be awarded.

(2) On the other hand, it has been held that the mere taking of a deed from a third person, without evidence showing title or possession in him, does not establish right of possession in plaintiff.—Layzod v. Martin, 26 N.E.2d 423, 305 Ill.App. 1.

36. Cal.—Thompson v. Smith, 28 Cal. 527.

The damages recoverable are such as are the natural and proximate result of the acts complained of, and nothing beyond this.[37] Items of damages recoverable include the loss of all[38] or part[39] of a crop that could have been obtained in the absence of the acts complained of, and the expense of protecting the property, etc.[40] On the other hand, there can be no recovery for injury to business,[41] for bodily and mental pain,[42] for losses resulting to plaintiff on the breach of defendant's expressed promise to surrender possession,[43] or for the expenses of defending the suit and attorney's fees;[44] nor can damages for conversion of plaintiff's chattels be recovered.[45] Damages cannot be recovered for timber taken from the land which had previously been determined to belong to defendant in a replevin suit.[46]

Rents and profits. Where under the statute damages are recoverable, the reasonable value of the rents and profits, or the rental value, of the land is an element of damage which is generally to be taken into consideration,[47] without regard to the nature or extent of the right or title by which possession was held,[48] and according to some decisions this is the proper measure of damages.[49] Where it is shown that defendant soon after the institution of the suit abandoned the premises and that other persons intruded, claiming not for defendant but for themselves, defendant will not be responsible for the rent accruing after the abandonment.[50] Interest on damages awarded is not recoverable where the damages are based on the reasonable rental value of the premises, and not on a fixed or agreed rental.[51]

Improvements. In the absence of a statute authorizing it, compensation for improvements cannot be claimed in an action for forcible entry and detainer[52] or for unlawful detainer.[53]

Waste. Under some statutes it has been held that waste committed upon the premises is an ele-

Entry by lessee's surety
The measure of a lessee's damages for a forcible entry and detainer by the lessee's surety, who paid the rent to the lessor, is the difference between the rent reserved and the value of the premises for the period plaintiff was out of possession.—Quinn v. ment of damage which must be considered by the jury.[54]

Exemplary or punitive damages may be recovered, under the statutes, where the entry was wanton and malicious,[55] but not where the acts complained of were done under color of right and in good faith and without malice.[56]

Nominal damages. If the injury caused by the violation of one's possession is merely technical, nominal damages only will be awarded.[57]

§ 60. Double or Treble Damages

The damages awarded by the jury may, under some statutes, be doubled or trebled by the court.

Some statutes authorize a judgment for plaintiff for double or treble damages.[58] These statutes are highly penal in their character and are subject to strict construction;[59] and ordinarily they are regarded as mandatory and as imposing the duty on the court to double or treble the damages awarded by the jury,[60] although some statutes have been considered to be merely directory.[61] They are not retroactive and no damages are recoverable which accrued prior to the time that the statute went into effect.[62]

The damages which may be doubled or trebled are the actual damages sustained[63] and not the actual and punitive damages.[64] Moreover, nothing can be doubled or trebled but what the jury specifically report as damages;[65] and the terms of their verdict must control,[66] unless the damages awarded by the jury are in excess of the amount claimed in the complaint.[67] If the complaint states a cause of action in addition to the forcible entry and detainer complained of and the verdict is general, the court has no power to treble the amount of the verdict since this cannot be done without trebling damages which the statute does not authorize to be trebled.[68] Double or treble damages cannot be recovered unless the force essential to constitute a forcible entry or forcible detainer, such as will authorize a restitution of the premises, is established;[69] a mere trespass, however wrongful

Rents

Under a statute which provides for the recovery of rents, damages and waste, but for the trebling only of damages, rents accruing before termination of tenancy may not be trebled in computing damages for unlawful detainer; but after tenancy has been terminated by statutory notice, person in unlawful possession becomes liable for rental value or reasonable value of use and occupation, which is recoverable as damages and therefore may be trebled.—Forrester v. Cook, supra.

Unusual force

A statutory provision allowing recovery of treble damages for forcible entry or detainer applies only where force is unusual, or tends to bring about breach of the peace, and entry is with a strong hand, or a multitude of people, or in a riotous manner, or with personal violence, or with threat and menace to life and limb, or under circumstances which it may be, is not sufficient,[70] nor do the statutes ordinarily apply as against one who takes or holds possession under a claim of right.[71] However, the particular statute may provide for double damages in case of an unlawful detainer,[72] or for unlawful detainer provided the detention was willful and knowingly wrongful on the part of the tenant.[73]

§ 61. Recovery by Separate Action

The damages may, under some statutes, be recovered in a separate action for trespass.

Under some of the statutes, damages for forcible entry and detainer may be recovered in a separate action for trespass.[74]

§ 62. Costs

Costs ordinarily are awarded in favor of the successful party, whether plaintiff or defendant.

As a general rule a successful plaintiff in an action for forcible entry and detainer is entitled to costs[75] and where defendant prevails costs should be awarded in his favor.[76] However, even though judgment is rendered for plaintiff, defendant may be awarded costs, if, on demand by suit, where there has been no previous demand, he offers to give up possession when served with process, on filing his plea;[77] and he is not liable for costs where it appears that the only possession had by plaintiff of the land in question consisted of placing some lumber on it, which was removed by defendant.[78] Where by consent of counsel it is made to appear to the court after issue joined that defendant had yielded possession of the premises in controversy to plaintiff, thereby extinguishing the cause of action, the court is without jurisdiction to render judgment for plaintiff and tax defendant with the costs.[79] The amount and items which are allowable as costs depend on the statutory provisions.[80]

Judgment on disclaimer. If defendant pleads that he is not in possession, the judgment will be for costs against plaintiff,[81] or if issue joined the only issue involved will be as to whom the costs would be taxed.[82]

Security for costs. When the statute requires a bond for costs to be given when the action is brought, it will be dismissed for the want of such bond.[83]

L. TRIAL AND NEW TRIAL

§ 63. In General

The rules relating to trials in civil action in general apply, except in so far as they are modified by the statutory provisions or peculiar facts involved.

The rules relating to trials in civil actions in general apply to a trial of an action for forcible entry and detainer, except to the extent that they are modified by the statutory provisions, or by the peculiar nature of the facts, involved in such an action.[84] Under some statutes relating to trials for forcible entry and detainer before justices, the justice should enter upon his docket the evidence rejected or admitted over objection,[85] his reasons for admitting or rejecting such evidence,[86] and the return of the sheriff to the venire.[87] Under some statutes, also, one who has been wrongfully ousted from possession of land may be entitled to have the damages sustained by him assessed by the jury trying the main issue in forcible entry and detainer.[88] Under a statute authorizing the summons to be returnable to, and the case heard and determined at, any term of the court, the action may be brought, docketed, and tried during a term of court.[89]

§ 64. Questions of Law and Fact

Questions of law are to be determined by the court, and questions of fact on which the evidence is conflicting or doubtful are for the determination of the jury; but if the evidence is clear and undisputed the court may direct a verdict, or sustain a demurrer to the evidence, or grant a nonsuit.

If the evidence is clear and undisputed the case is to be decided by the court as a matter of law;[90] but, on the other hand, questions of fact on which the evidence is conflicting or of a doubtful character are for the determination of the jury.[91] What acts or circumstances will constitute possession is a question of law for the court,[92] but whether these acts or circumstances exist and plaintiff was in actual possession at the time of the entry complained of is a question of fact for the jury.[93] Where the evidence is sufficient to be submitted to the jury, and is conflicting or of a doubtful character, it is also for the jury to decide whether a forcible entry was in fact made[94] and who made it,[95] whether the person making it acted in his own behalf or as the representative of another,[96] what degree of force or violence was used,[97] and whether there was unlawful detainer, that is, whether plaintiff was kept out of possession through fear or personal violence.[98] It is also usually a question of fact for the jury whether the notice or demand required by statute was given,[99] and whether the remedy for unlawful entry and detainer is barred by possession for a specified number of years.[1] The question of exemplary damages may be withdrawn from the jury where no malice is shown;[2] and under a statute which declares that the damages occasioned to plaintiff by any forcible entry or detainer shall be as-

Waiver, and reasonable notice of intention to insist on contract

In an action of forcible detainer, brought against purchasers of realty, questions of the waiver for a season of the provision making time of the essence of defendants' contract, and of reasonable notice of a later intention to insist on the strict terms of the contract, are within the trial court's jurisdiction.—Craft v. sessed, and that judgment may be entered "in the discretion of the court either for the amount of the damages and rent found due or for three times the amount so found," the question whether the damages should be trebled and exemplary damages thereby awarded in an action of unlawful detainer is a question for the court, and not for the jury.[3]

Directing verdict. If the evidence is clear and without conflict, the court may direct a verdict by instructing the jury peremptorily to find for plaintiff or defendant,[4] or, which is substantially the same thing, sustain a demurrer to the evidence;[5] or it may grant a nonsuit, if the evidence is insufficient to be submitted to the jury.[6] The court, however, should not take the case from the jury by directing a verdict, or sustaining a demurrer to the evidence, where the evidence is conflicting as to any material point in issue,[7] or where there is any evidence tending to support the theory of the party against whom the instruction is asked,[8] or where there is no evidence on which a verdict in accordance with the instruction could be based.[9]

The instructions in an action of forcible entry and detainer are controlled by rules relating to instructions in civil actions in general.

The rules relating to instructions in civil actions in general control in determining the propriety and sufficiency of the instructions, in an action of forcible entry and detainer, in stating the law as applied to the facts of the case,[10] such as on the question of damages.[11] The instructions should state the prop-

10. Mo.—Koger v. Ward, App., 243 S.W. 413.

Instructions held proper

(1) Under a statute providing that when a person wrongfully and without force, by disseizin, obtains and continues in possession of lands after demand in writing for their delivery by the person having the legal right to their possession, the person in possession shall be guilty of an unlawful detainer, in an action of unlawful detainer by a tenant against one who claimed title, directing the jury to disregard evidence as to possession long prior to the date of the entry by defendant and to disregard evidence as to title of the land in controversy was not error.—Koger v. Ward, supra.

(2) In an action against attaching creditor and sheriff for forcible and wrongful entry of plaintiff's home and occupancy after entry, an instruction that defendants had the right to enter the premises and to seize the property under the writ of attachment was not erroneous on uncontradicted evidence that sheriff procured key from constable in apparent possession and made entry peaceably and without force.—Himmelbauer v. Union Bank & Trust Co., 220 P. 84, 68 Mont. 34.

Mont.—Hillembauer v. Union Bank & Trust Co., 220 P. 84, 68 Mont. 34.

(1) An instruction following the language of the statute that damages shall include waste and injury as well as rents and profits due both in such sum as the jury believes from the evidence, etc., is correct.—Welden v. Myers, 253 S.W. 1086, 212 Mo.App. 479.

(2) In boundary dispute with claim of damages for eviction, instruction should be given that if jury found for plaintiff, it should fix damages for sum in its discretion as it might believe from evidence was a reasonably fair value of the use of the dwelling from the time he was deprived thereof, not exceeding the amount sued for.—Farmers Nat. Bank of Somerset v. Bolton, 97 S.W.2d 406, 265 Ky. 586.

Instructions held erroneous

(1) In action for unlawful detainer wherein jury was instructed that measure of damages was fair rental value of property giving additional ositions in such terms and with such qualifications as not to be liable to mislead the jury,[12] and should explain the meaning of legal terms used.[13] The court may instruct the jury hypothetically or on a contingent state of facts in case they shall so find from the evidence,[14] but the instruction must not be so worded as to assume as established any facts which the jury must determine from the evidence,[15] or so as to cut off from the consideration of the jury any matter of defense set up by defendant in support of which evidence has been introduced.[16]

An instruction is erroneous, and if requested may properly be refused, which puts the right of recovery on the basis of an act different from the one charged,[17] or which in setting out what must be established to authorize a recovery omits any essential element of the offense,[18] or which ignores material issues,[19] or assumes as undisputed a material question in issue,[20] or which relates to matters not to be determined by the jury.[21] Instructions as to a certain issue should be founded on all the testimony on that issue and it is error to pick out a single fact and instruct the jury as to its probative force.[22]

The different instructions must be consistent with each other,[23] and instructions given on behalf of the respective parties should be made to harmonize by the court before they are given to the jury.[24] It is not error to refuse to give requested instructions which are covered by the general charge,[25] but an entire failure to instruct on any material point in issue if requested to do so is reversible error.[26] It is improper for the court to place on one or the other of the parties a burden which he is not legally required to bear, but the error is one of which the opposite party cannot complain.[27] An instruction which submits a form of verdict which in no respect conforms to the statutory requirements should not be given.[28] instruction that plaintiff was entitled to value of use of property during period of detention and for loss of profits was erroneous as authorizing double recovery.—Reichlin v. First Nat. Bank, 51 P.2d 380, 184 Wash. 304.

(2) In boundary dispute with claim for damages for eviction, instruction which gave jury no guide by which to determine amount of damages and which permitted them to award damages in any sum not exceeding amount sued for was erroneous.—Farmers Nat. Bank of Somerset v. Bolton, 97 S.W.2d 406, 265 Ky. 586.

Instructions held proper

(1) An instruction that if plaintiff rented the land from another and at the time of entry by defendant had the land in cultivation with a crop of wheat thereon which was then in shock on the land, to find that plaintiff was in actual possession of the land, and that if plaintiff was in actual possession he was entitled to recover, was correct.—Koger v. Ward, Mo.App., 243 S.W. 413.

(2) Where defendant admitted that plaintiffs were in possession of land and claimed that in extending a fence he had done so on invitation of one of plaintiffs, jury should have been instructed that defendant should be found guilty if he entered without invitation and without consent of plaintiffs, and should be found not guilty if entry was invited or was made with consent of plaintiffs.—Snyder v. § 66. Verdict and Findings

The verdict or findings in an action of forcible entry and detainer are ordinarily controlled by the rules relating to verdicts and findings in civil actions in general.

The requisites and validity of a verdict or findings in an action of forcible entry and detainer are ordinarily controlled by the rules relating to verdicts and findings in civil actions in general,[29] such as that the verdict must be responsive to the issue,[30] must find on every issue necessary to a recovery,[31] and must be sufficiently definite and certain to authorize the entry of judgment.[32] The verdict need not be in the exact words of the issue, but is sufficient if it contains the substance of the issue,[33] and, where the form of the verdict is prescribed by statute, a substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient.[34] It need not describe the premises other than by reference to the complaint.[35]

The verdict may be either general or special,[36] and a general verdict in effect finds every essential fact necessary to authorize it.[37] If the verdict responds fully to the issue as made up, it is not necessary that it should find expressly as to any other fact.[38] A general verdict of guilty[39] or not guilty,[40] or guilty as alleged in the complaint,[41] is sufficient if responsive to the issue; but a verdict will be upheld, although in form neither guilty nor not guilty, where it is full and intelligible so as to support the judgment.[42] A verdict of guilty of forcible entry or detainer is good where the complaint charges both offenses; it is equivalent to finding defendants guilty of both offenses.[43] A verdict which finds the defendant guilty as to a part, and not guilty of the balance of the charge laid, is good.[44] However, where the warrant charges one cause of action only, a verdict for another is void.[45]

The verdict need not be signed by the jury,[46] except where the statute so provides.[47]

Merely formal defects in the verdict may be corrected by the court[48] or the court may permit the jury to amend the verdict in this respect;[49] and a clerical error may be deemed immaterial.[50]

Findings. In trials by the court without a jury special findings of fact are necessary under some of the statutes.[51] The court, however, is not authorized to make findings as to any matters not in issue;[52] but it must find on each material issue,[53] although, if the material facts are found, it is not necessary to find them in all the various ways employed in setting out the cause of action,[54] or to find as to a particular issue which is determined by the other findings made.[55] The findings must be consistent with each other.[56] The court's pronouncement at the end of the trial that it will find for one party does not have the effect of a jury's verdict, and does not constitute a conclusive finding for such party.[57]

§ 67. New Trial

A new trial ordinarily cannot be granted in the court which tried the case, unless it is authorized by statute.

The party against whom a judgment is rendered in a forcible entry and detainer case is not entitled to a new trial in the same court as a matter of right;[58] and the court[59] or justice of the peace[60] who has tried the case ordinarily cannot grant a new trial, unless such power is conferred by statute,[61] although it has been held that no statutory authorization is essential to the exercise of this power.[62]

M. JUDGMENT

§ 68. Form and Sufficiency in General

The judgment must conform to the issues; but, except to the extent required by statute, it is not required to be drawn or entered in any particular form or manner, and it will not be disturbed because of mere informalities or irregularities.

A judgment, in forcible entry and detainer, must conform to the issues presented by the pleadings and proof;[63] but, except to the extent required by the statute,[64] it is not required to be drawn or entered in any particular form or manner,[65] and it will not be set aside or reversed because it is informal or slightly irregular, or because of mere surplusage in its recitals,[66] where it appears from its face that the court intended to pronounce and did clearly pronounce sentence on the facts of the case.[67] A judgment is invalid which is materially variant from the verdict,[68] or which is based on a verdict which is fatally defective,[69] or where the proceedings, in which it is entered, wholly ignore the method of procedure required by statute.[70] The

A statute authorizing the party against whom judgment is rendered in an action for the recovery of real property to demand another trial has no application to forcible entry and detainer, and the only way in which a losing party may have a new trial as a matter of right, in such a case, is by appealing to the proper superior court where the statute provides for a trial de novo.—Geter v. Judge of district court is authorized to grant new trial in case of forcible entry and detainer tried by him.—State ex rel. Krause v. Dayton, 17 A. 91, 51 N.J.Law 272.

In Iowa, under a statute authorizing a new trial in an action for the recovery of real property, it has been held that, where action for forcible entry and detainer brought before a justice of the peace was certified to the district court, where the trial was to a jury, and where court directed a verdict against defendants and overruled defendants' motion for a new trial made under such statute, supreme court's judgment which reversed generally the judgment of the district court did not entitle defendants to judgment restoring them to possession or its value, and the court properly granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial.—Citizens' State Bank of Panora v. Immaterial defect in entry of judgment

Where warrant was signed and issued by county judge as such, and not as judge of the quarterly court, the mere fact that on the trial of the proceeding before him the resulting judgment was by mistake or inadvertence entered on the order book of the quarterly court, of which he was ex officio judge, is immaterial, assuming that such court had no jurisdiction, the papers being sent to the circuit court when the judgment was traversed, and affidavit filed in the circuit court not showing that the matter was tried in the quarterly court, except that the judgment had been entered in the order book of that court.—Pennington v. Sammons, 236 S.W. 259, 193 Ky. 328.

fact, however, that the judge, at the end of the trial, pronounces that he will find for one party does not prevent him from changing his opinion, prior to the entry of his judgment, and entering a judgment for the other party.[71] The judgment must be entered within the time prescribed by statute,[72] but it will not be set aside because, as written by the clerk, it appears to have been entered one year later than it actually was.[73]

An express award of execution in the judgment is not usually necessary.[74]

For or against several parties. In an action against several defendants, if the evidence shows that only one is in possession, the judgment should be against him and not against all;[75] and, if a judgment is entered against two defendants, it is indivisible, and, if erroneous as to one, it must be reversed as to both.[76] A judgment in favor of plaintiffs, where the landlord and tenant are both plaintiffs, must be modified as to the landlord, as the tenant or one having the right to possession is the only one entitled to judgment.[77]

§ 69. Description of Land

The judgment must describe the land with such certainty as will permit an execution thereon being effectuated.

The judgment must describe the land with such certainty as will permit of an execution thereon being effectuated;[78] otherwise it is void.[79] However, it has been held that a judgment may be sufficient, if it is for the restitution of the property described in the complaint, where the complaint is for a specifically described parcel of land;[80] and that a defective description may be aided by reference to a good description contained in the complaint[81] or other parts of the record;[82] and also that deeds and previous transactions between the parties to the action may be referred to in explanation of the description in the judgment.[83] A judgment which so describes the land that it cannot be identified and located as the land mentioned in the complaint is fatally defective.[84]

§ 70. Judgment by Default or Confession

A judgment by default or confession may be entered only where it is authorized by the statute.

Under some of the statutes a judgment by default[85] or on confession[86] is not authorized. Under other statutes, if plaintiff has filed his petition and served notice on defendant within the time prescribed by statute therefor,[87] and defendant fails or refuses to answer, judgment may properly be rendered for plaintiff as in other cases of default where no damages are claimed or awarded;[88] and, if a default judgment is permissible, it is not an abuse of discretion to refuse to set it aside if defendant fails to present with his motion to open default an answer raising issues.[89] Before such a judgment may be entered, however, plaintiff, under some of these statutes, must prove the allegations of his complaint.[90]

§ 71. Extent of Award or Relief

The extent of the award or relief in favor of plaintiff is considered infra § 72, and of defendant infra § 73.

§ 72. —— To Plaintiff

A judgment in favor of plaintiff, against the person in possession of the premises, usually should be only for the restitution of the premises sued for and costs, and should not award damages unless specially authorized by statute.

Where the finding is in favor of plaintiff, in the absence of statute otherwise, the only relief that should be granted plaintiff is a judgment for the restitution of the premises sued for,[91] and costs, as explained supra § 62; and, where plaintiff has taken possession of the premises at the commencement of the action on giving bond to pay all accruing damages, if he should finally be successful, only a judgment for costs can be rendered against defendant.[92] A judgment restoring possession should be for immediate possession, and not for possession some time in the future.[93]

Against whom awarded. Ordinarily the judgment should go only against parties to the suit shown to be actually in possession when suit was brought,[94] or against those who have come into possession under them since the commencement of the suit,[95] but it has been held that a judgment of restitution is proper against those who were engaged in making the unlawful entry, although they did not detain the premises afterward,[96] as well as against those who continued in the occupation of them.[97]

Property included. The judgment should be confined to the land in controversy,[98] and whether or not it should be for the whole or only a part of the premises claimed depends on the extent of plaintiff's right of possession,[99] and not on the extent of defendant's actual possession,[1] and, if plaintiff proves a right to a part only of the land, he is entitled to a verdict and judgment pro tanto.[2] Moreover, the judgment should be limited to such portion of the land as plaintiff was dispossessed of on the day the warrant issued,[3] and cannot include other portions taken possession of pending the litigation.[4] Where the verdict gives to plaintiff the land claimed in the summons, and judgment is rendered accordingly, it is proper for the court, after plaintiff's counsel has released certain land included in the verdict which does not belong to plaintiff, to set aside the first judgment, and enter a second judgment for the land included in the verdict, less the part released.[5]

Requiring payment of money as condition of recovery. The court has no power to impose in a judgment that plaintiff recover possession the condition that he should pay defendant a sum of money; such a judgment would be irregular and voidable on direct attack.[6]

Damages. Although no damages can be awarded by the judgment unless there is special statutory authority therefor, as explained supra § 58, a judgment will not be reversed merely because one cent damages was allowed where the merits were fairly with plaintiff.[7] Even under statutes which authorize an award of damages to plaintiff, the judgment may award damages only for the amount named in the summons issued by the justice,[8] or for the amount assessed by the jury;[9] and, where there is no finding of damages by the verdict of the jury, damages cannot properly be awarded.[10] As such damages are awarded merely as incidental to a judgment for possession, see supra § 58, a judgment for damages alone is therefore erroneous.[11] Under a statute providing that a judgment against either party shall also be rendered against his sureties in a bond given under the provisions of the act, and permitting defendant to give a bond to entitle him to retain possession, a judgment may be rendered against defendant and his sureties for possession and the damages assessed.[12]

Under statutes permitting the recovery of rents and profits, see supra § 59, where one of two defendants comes into possession subsequently to the other, and holds it for a shorter time, a joint judgment for rents and profits will be improper; but, where they are put in possession in pursuance of one general design and are acting in concert to hold the possession for the same object, such judgment will not be held to be error.[13] Although the interest of plaintiff has been sold, pending the action, the judgment in his favor should be both for possession and for the rents.[14]

§ 73. —— To Defendant

A judgment in favor of the defendant ordinarily should be that the action be dismissed, unless plaintiff has given a bond and dispossessed defendant at the commencement of the action, in which case the judgment should be for the restitution of the premises, and under some statutes for damages.

Ordinarily, unless otherwise provided by statute, the only judgment that can be pronounced in case defendant is successful is that plaintiff's action be dismissed and that defendant go without day.[15] Where, however, plaintiff elects to give a bond and dispossess defendant at the commencement of the action, as he may do under some statutes, see supra § 52, a judgment for defendant should be for the restitution of the premises,[16] as where the action abates[17] or is dismissed,[18] or a demurrer is sustained to the complaint.[19] Under some of these statutes it is the duty of the court on defendant's motion to award a writ of inquiry to assess defendant's damages if he is successful.[20]

Where plaintiff, on filing the complaint, causes a writ of restitution to be issued, which is executed by ousting defendant and placing plaintiff in possession, the court does not acquire jurisdiction to determine the merits, and cannot, on dismissal, order restitution to defendant, but at most may vacate the order of restitution under which defendant was ousted, defendant's situation and remedies being the same as though plaintiff, without beginning suit, had gone on the premises and forcibly removed him.[21] So, where judgment is recovered by a plaintiff, and under it a writ of possession issues, and defendant is turned out of possession, an appeal is granted, and before trial of the case plaintiff moves the dismissal of his action, and declares that he will not further prosecute it, the court, if asked, should award a writ of possession to restore possession of the land to defendant,[22] and it is not error to refuse such dismissal except on condition that plaintiff make restitution, as the dismissal may be entered later.[23] It has been held that, if defendant surrenders possession, and the higher court sustains his writ of error and reverses the judgment for plaintiff and remands the case because a change of venue should have been granted, the justice to whom the case is transferred may dismiss the case on plaintiff's motion;[24] but he cannot cancel the removal order without setting aside the dismissal.[25] A defendant against whom judgment is rendered, which is afterward reversed, but who does not lose possession of the property under or through the judgment, is not entitled to be restored to possession as against third parties who have ousted him during the pendency of the action.[26]

determines the right to present possession of the property.[27] It does not determine the ultimate rights of the parties,[28] and in no way affects the title of the parties to the land in controversy[29] whether legal or equitable.[30] It has the effect only of placing the parties in their original position prior to the unlawful entry.[31]

§ 75. Execution and Enforcement

The judgment ordinarily is enforced by the issuance of a writ of restitution, in compliance with the statutory requirements relating thereto, and by the execution of such writ by dispossessing the defendant and his privies. Such enforcement ordinarily cannot be restrained by injunction.

The court which renders the final judgment is the proper court in which to make application for the issuance of the writ of restitution.[32] A form of writ provided by statute may be modified to suit the appropriate judgment,[33] and clerical defects or omissions in the writ may be amended;[34] but the writ should designate the property with sufficient certainty to enable the officer to proceed to execute it.[35] The statutory requirements must be complied with as to the time,[36] manner, and other matters relating to the issuance and service of such writs.[37] Under a statute that an appeal by defendant shall not stay proceedings on the judgment unless the judge or justice before whom the same was rendered so directs, it is the duty of the sheriff to execute a writ of possession, notwithstanding an order staying execution pending appeal, where the judge issuing such order was not the judge before whom the case was tried and judgment rendered.[38]

In order to constitute a full execution of a writ, both defendant and his personal property must be removed from the premises, and the real estate given to plaintiff,[39] unless the removal of the personal property is waived by defendant.[40] Where defendant is decreed to be ejected, he must vacate and be ejected from every part of the land included within the area defined by the court in fixing the boundaries in the description of the property involved in the action,[41] and he cannot prevent execution of the writ of restitution by transferring the possession of the premises to a stranger.[42] Where, however, plaintiff, after recovering a judgment, obtains possession peaceably and without the aid of a writ of restitution, it is a complete satisfaction of the judgment, except the costs, and he cannot have a writ of restitution under it afterward.[43] Under a statute providing for an execution for restitution and for damages, rents, and costs, an execution may properly issue for rents and costs after restitution of the premises.[44] A writ of possession becomes functus officio in so far as it is a writ of execution commanding the sheriff to satisfy the part of the judgment awarding damages, where no levy is made on the judgment debtor's property prior to the return day, and there is no order staying execution, but it is still good in so far as it is a writ of possession, directing a restitution of the premises and may be executed after the return day.[45]

Alias writ. Where a writ of restitution, issued within the statutory time after the rendition of the judgment, has been quashed, another may issue, although such period has expired.[46]

Who may be dispossessed. While it has apparently been held to the contrary,[47] by the weight of authority a writ of restitution will not authorize the officer to dispossess one who was not privy to defendant's forcible entry and detainer, and who is a stranger to the parties and the record; but it authorizes him to dispossess only defendant and his privies.[48] Nevertheless a writ of restitution will not necessarily be unavailing because the persons who were living on the land at the institution of the suit were not made defendants, as it may be enforced against the servants of the person who was made defendant; and the fact that defendant does not live in the county where the land lies does not alter the case.[49] A judgment against the head of the family is sufficient authority to dispossess his wife[50] or any other members of the family.[51]

Relief against enforcement. Although there is authority to the contrary,[52] the better view is that, except in case of fraud or mistake, or a showing of manifest irreparable injury,[53] a court of equity cannot interpose by injunction to restrain a plaintiff who has obtained judgment from having restitution of the possession,[54] and this is so notwithstanding plaintiff is insolvent[55] and defendant holds the undisputed legal title to the land[56] or has recovered judgment in ejectment for the premises.[57] Equity, however, may interfere by injunction to restrain the enforcement of a judgment which is void,[58] and the title to the land of which restitution is ordered is in litigation between the parties to the action,[59] and equity when it thus interferes will enjoin the enforcement of the judgment not only as to the land, but also as to the recovery of monthly rents and damages.[60] In a suit by defendant for such an injunction, plaintiff may amend his unverified complaint, by verifying it.[61]

A bill to quiet possession may be maintained by a purchaser in possession, under a decree of court, to prevent the enforcement of a judgment against his tenant, in unlawful entry and detainer, in which he was not a party, although the person holding the judgment would be entitled to possession on bringing a proper action to determine his right.[62]

tice's court in forcible entry and detainer cases, in jurisdictions where all courts are courts of record.[63] The right of the losing party to appeal in such cases exists only when and to the extent that it is conferred by constitutional or statutory provision, and is sometimes conferred by statutes relating to appeals generally or by statutes relating specially to appeals in this class of actions,[64] and, as has been expressed, this right of appeal is as clear and unqualified as in any other civil action.[65] This right, it has been held, is conferred by a general statute providing that any party to a judgment or decree may appeal therefrom,[66] but not by a constitutional provision giving the right of appeal "in all civil cases."[67] If the statute giving the right of appeal excepts from its operation judgments by default a party against whom there is a judgment by default is not entitled to an appeal, although he first moves to set aside the judgment and the motion is overruled.[68]

In forma pauperis. Under some statutes defendant in actions of forcible entry and detainer may on taking the prescribed oath appeal as a poor person.[69]

Waiver or loss of right. The losing party's right of appeal is not lost by waiver or estoppel, by his being removed by execution from the premises pending appeal,[70] or by his vacating the premises to avoid a forcible removal;[71] nor is he estopped from prosecuting error proceedings by his demanding and receiving rent from the party in possession, pending such proceedings.[72] If, however, he sues out a writ of error and waives an appeal, he thereby waives the benefit of procedure by appeal.[73] Plaintiff does not waive his right to insist on a dismissal of defendant's writ of error by filing his brief where, before he has done so, he has entered his motion to dismiss and the court reserves this motion to the hearing.[74]

§ 78. —— Appellate Jurisdiction

The court to which a forcible entry and detainer cause may be removed by appeal or writ of error is controlled by the statute applicable to such appeals or writs of error.

The court or courts to which a forcible entry and detainer cause originating in a justice's or other inferior court may be removed by appeal or writ of error are controlled by the provisions of the statute regulating such appeals,[75] and accordingly, under the various statutes, such appeal will lie to a county court,[76] a circuit court,[77] or a district court,[78] or a writ of error[79] or appeal[80] will lie to an intermediate court of appeals. Where, however, the justice or other inferior court did not acquire jurisdiction, the court to which the case is removed acquires none,[81] and evidence cannot supply the de-

Unless mandatory requirements are rigidly complied with in justice's court, it does not acquire jurisdiction, and the circuit court on appeal acquires no jurisdiction.—State ex rel. Brown v. Bird, 73 S.W.2d 821, 228 Mo.App. 800.

fect;[82] neither can appellate jurisdiction be given by consent of the parties,[83] nor be conferred by amendment and the appearance of the parties where the justice's jurisdiction does not appear.[84] The failure of the inferior court to enter a judgment, in accordance with its opinion, does not deprive the appellate court of jurisdiction of the proceedings, where the parties treat the opinion as a finding of the court and as conclusive, and defendant traversing the adverse finding fails to raise a question in the appellate court as to its lack of jurisdiction.[85]

Under some statutes the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction in proceedings brought under the forcible entry and detainer statutes,[86] as on an appeal from the judgment of the circuit court on an appeal from the judgment of a justice's court,[87] or on a writ of error,[88] or on either an appeal or writ of error.[89] If the court to which the writ of error is sued out has no jurisdiction, the supreme court acquires no jurisdiction to review the alleged error.[90]

§ 79. —— What Judgments or Orders May Be Reviewed

Ordinarily an appeal lies only from a final judgment or order, and under some statutes, where damages are awarded, only where the sum awarded is in excess of a specified amount.

Ordinarily an appeal lies only from a final judgment or order,[91] and this has been held to include a judgment of dismissal of the action,[92] and a judgment by default.[93] Under a statute authorizing a party aggrieved, in the action, to appeal, defendant may appeal from a judgment which is favorable to him, but which is based on a finding contrary to his contention.[94]

In the absence of a provision to that effect, a statute regulating an appeal from a judgment of the court or justice first trying the case does not apply to a further appeal from the judgment or order of an intermediate court;[95] and it has been held that an order of the superior court setting aside a judgment of affirmance of the judgment of the justice for failure of appellant to appear at the trial is not appealable under a statute providing for an appeal on the granting of a motion for a new trial.[96]

As dependent on amount of judgment. Under some statutes an appeal lies from a judgment of a justice irrespective of the amount involved.[97] On the other hand, under other statutes, which have been held constitutional,[98] actions of forcible entry and detainer are within the pecuniary limitations regulating the right to appeal, and a judgment, in such action, is appealable only where the sum designated therein as damages is in excess of the amount specified by the statute,[99] and this is true

Failure of defendant to appear in forcible entry and detainer proceeding in justice's court, or a personal appearance alone without a written answer, does not deprive district court of jurisdiction to entertain defendant's appeal, since district court has same jurisdiction as justice's court to proceed as on default, and that includes power to render whatever judgment the proofs call for.—State ex rel. Refusal to allow error not reviewable as judgment
Under a statute providing that in proceedings to review the judgment or final order of the justice in forcible detainer proceedings, a petition in error can be filed in the court of common pleas only by leave of such court, a refusal by the court of common pleas to allow a petition in error to be filed in such court is not reviewable on error, such refusal not being a judgment in the case pending in such court.—Rothwell v. notwithstanding the particular statute relating to forcible entry and detainer provides for an appeal without expressly referring to such restriction.[1] Under some of these statutes, however, the fact that the judgment is for more than the statutory amount does not give the appellate court jurisdiction of the entire subject matter of the judgment.[2]

Citation on appeal. When a defendant appeals from a justice's court to a superior court, he is fully apprised of the nature of the action he is called on to defend and cannot, on appeal, raise the question of the regularity of the citation.[3]

§ 80. —— Requisites of and Proceedings for Transfer of Cause

The requisites of, and proceedings for, taking an appeal and transferring the cause to the reviewing court are governed by statutory regulations, which must be at least substantially complied with.

The requisites of, and proceedings for, taking an appeal and transferring the cause to the reviewing court, in an action of forcible entry and detainer are governed by the general statutes relating to appeals in other cases,[4] except where they are governed by statutory provisions relating to actions of this character,[5] in which cases the general statutes do not apply.[6] There should be, in the first instance, a compliance with the substantial requirements of the statute relating to taking the appeal,[7] and where there is such a compliance the appellate court should take jurisdiction of the parties and afford the appealing party the opportunity of perfecting his appeal so as to bring it within the strict compliance of the statute.[8] The statutory regulations should be complied with as to the time of taking the appeal,[9] or an extension thereof;[10] the application for the review;[11] the time and manner of giving notice of appeal;[12] and the payment or unconditional tender of the justice's fees before he is required to send up the papers.[13]

If an affidavit is required as a basis for the allowance of an appeal, it must be filed in the manner and time required by statute;[14] and it is sufficient if it conforms to the statute specially relating to actions of forcible entry and detainer.[15]

Motion for new trial. It has been held that it is not a prerequisite to an appeal that the losing party should ask for a new trial;[16] and in any event the appeal must be taken from the judgment and not from an order overruling a motion for a new trial.[17]

Filing transcript and other papers. If the statute requires the justice to file a transcript of the proceedings before him in the superior court within a designated time, his negligent omission to do so will not be permitted to prejudice either party.[18] If, however, the statute makes it the duty of appellant to cause the transcript to be filed in the superior court within a designated time, the statute will be considered mandatory and a compliance therewith by appellant is necessary,[19] and it is no excuse that he relied on the clerk to file the transcript;[20] but it is not necessary that the filing be done by appellant in person, it is sufficient if the transcript is filed by the justice on his behalf.[21] If the statute requires appellant to see that the complaint is filed with the transcript, he cannot take advantage of the absence of the complaint's being returned by the justice in the court with his transcript and have the action dismissed.[22] Omission to file the transcript, as required, is fatal to the appeal as the appellate court acquires no jurisdiction over the subject matter,[23] except that, under some statutes, appellee, in such a case, may produce the transcript and have the judgment affirmed.[24]

§ 81. —— Presentation and Reservation in Lower Court of Grounds for Review

Questions not presented and reserved in the trial court will not ordinarily be considered on appeal or error.

As in the case of appeals generally, questions not presented and reserved in the trial court will not be considered on appeal or error,[25] except where the question relates to the lack of jurisdiction of the lower court.[26]

§ 82. —— Amendments

Amendments may be permitted in the appellate court to correct defects or informalities in the proceedings in the lower court; but not to state a new cause of action or materially change the issues, or to remedy jurisdictional defects.

Amendments which may have been made in the lower court, may generally be made in the appellate court to correct defects or informalities in the proceedings in the justice's or other inferior court.[27] Such amendments, on appeal from a justice's court to a court of intermediate jurisdiction, if allowable are generally within the discretion of the appellate court,[28] and a refusal to exercise this discretion on the ground of want of power is error.[29] Amendments may be permitted as to the description of the land in suit,[30] even though the description in the complaint below was too indefinite to admit of restitution;[31] or amendments increasing the amount of damages,[32] or showing that the land was situated in the county where suit was brought,[33] or permitting defendant to file an amended answer.[34] The cause may be remanded for the purpose of such amendment,[35] and where the appellate court reverses a judgment because it was not shown that defendant was in possession of all the land described, the lower court on a remand of the cause may permit an amendment of the complaint so as to include only a part of the land therein described,[36] and may impose as a condition thereof payment of a part of the costs.[37]

An amendment, however, should not be permitted which is equivalent to bringing a new action,[38] or which may materially change the issues.[39] An amendment also will generally not be allowed to remedy a jurisdictional defect;[40] but it has been held, under a statute providing that the appeal shall be tried anew, on the merits, that if the justice had jurisdiction but the complaint failed to allege the jurisdictional facts, the appellate court may allow an amendment adding the necessary averments.[41]

An appeal is generally heard and determined in accordance with the rules relating to the hearing and determination of appeals in other civil cases, except to the extent that it is controlled by special statutory provisions.

An appeal in a forcible entry and detainer case is generally heard and determined in accordance with the rules relating to the hearing and determination of appeals in other civil cases,[42] except in so far as it is controlled by the facts and special statutory provisions relating to actions of this character.[43] In accordance with these rules or provisions, it has been held that, if the case is tried and determined on a certain theory, it must be so treated on appeal;[44] that matters will not be considered which are not within the scope of the appeal,[45] or which have not been properly made a part of the record;[46] and that harmless error or matters not prejudicial will not be considered, so as to disturb the judgment;[47] but an error is not harmless which is more than a mere error of pleading or procedure and which results in a miscarriage of justice.[48] If error is not apparent in the record, a verdict[49] or findings of fact[50] on conflicting proofs will not be set aside on appeal; and the judgment will not be disturbed on the ground that the property is not sufficiently described unless it affirmatively appears that the description will not serve to identify the property.[51] Where the complaint charges both a forcible entry and forcible detainer the judgment will not be reversed if the findings of fact, although insufficient to support a judgment for forcible entry, are sufficient to support a judgment for forcible detainer.[52]

(6) Striking out a valid special defense, where a general denial is sufficient, under the statute, in all cases.—Oklahoma City v. Hill, 46 P. 568, 4 Okl. 521.

A refusal to set aside an order dismissing the appeal is not harmful unless appellant had a meritorious defense.—Hamilton v. Stafford, 78 Ill.App. 54.

The reviewing court will not interfere on account of the amount of damages awarded unless the damages are so excessive that it appears that they were given under the influence of passion and prejudice, and that improper evidence bearing on the amount of damages was permitted to go to the jury.—Payson v. Holden, 11 Ky.Op. 771.

Presumptions. As a general rule, all reasonable presumptions will be indulged in favor of the correctness of the judgment appealed from,[53] such as, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, that the evidence supported the judgment[54] or authorized an assessment of special damages.[55] The amount allowed as damages may be presumed to be the reasonable value of the use of the land as fixed by the court,[56] but no such presumption should be indulged in, in order to defeat defendant's right of appeal, when it clearly appears that such was not the intention of the justice who entered the judgment.[57]

Modifications. Under some statutes or rules of court, the appellate court may correct or modify the judgment appealed from so as to give the relief intended, or in accordance with the facts,[58] and it may remand the case for the purpose of having such correction made by the lower court.[59] However, the court will not modify a judgment so as to allow treble damages where the facts are not before it.[60]

Dismissal. The appellate court may dismiss the appeal on a ground recognized by statute or rule of court[61] such as on the ground that the appeal was not taken within the time prescribed by stat-

Lack of jurisdictional amount

An appeal from a judgment against defendant for forty dollars was required to be dismissed under statute providing that no appeal shall be allowed from a county court judgment except where judgment shall be for damages exceeding one hundred dollars.—Brown v. Grant, supra.

As to land outside jurisdiction

Where plaintiff, seeking to recover tract of land in county of jurisdiction and small noncontiguous tract in another county, confessed error respecting part of judgment for restitution of second tract, supreme court, finding no substantial rights of defendant were adversely affected, would dismiss as to land in county outside trial court's jurisdiction.—Hall v. Haines, 51 P.2d 570, 175 Okl. 81.

ute,[62] or was taken prematurely.[63] It is not a ground for dismissal that, pending trial, defendant had abandoned the premises in litigation, where it appeared that on appeal by defendant to an intermediate court it rendered a judgment determining defendant's liability to pay double the value of the use and occupation of the premises from the execution of the appeal bond to the date of the judgment.[64]

Reversal; restitution of possession. A judgment which correctly awards possession to plaintiff will not be reversed merely because the writ of restitution was improperly or improvidently issued pending the trial.[65] According to some decisions, where plaintiff obtains judgment and is put in possession and defendant on appeal or error succeeds in reversing the judgment, he is entitled to be restored to possession,[66] and that too, although plaintiff has rented the premises;[67] but other decisions have reached a contrary conclusion.[68] If, subsequent to an entry of judgment for plaintiff in the detainer suit, defendant prevails in a suit to quiet title and is in possession by virtue of that suit, an affirmance of the detainer judgment will not be executed to the extent of restoring possession to plaintiff, but the cause will be remanded with directions to enforce a money judgment only.[69]

b. In Intermediate Court

The rules or statutory provisions relating to the hearing and determination of an appeal from a judgment of a justice in other cases ordinarily apply to the hearing and determination on review, by an intermediate court, of a judgment of a justice of the peace in a forcible entry and detainer case.

The rules or statutory provisions relating to the review of cases arising in a justice's court ordinarily apply to the review by an intermediate court of the judgment of a justice of the peace, in a forcible entry and detainer case, with regard to the hearing,[70] the scope of the review,[71] and the determination and disposition of the cause,[72] such as a reversal.[73] The justice's jurisdiction of the case will not be presumed where the transcript fails to show jurisdictional facts;[74] and a review of his findings as being against the weight of the evidence is not permissible in the absence of statute authorizing it.[75] In case the judgment is not in proper form for failure to describe the land it will be affirmed on the merits, but the cause will be remanded so that a proper judgment may be entered nunc pro tunc.[76] Under some statutes, if appellant fails to appear a judgment of affirmance is the only one which can be properly rendered.[77]

Remanding. Where an appeal is taken from a judgment of a justice deciding that he was without jurisdiction and the intermediate court reaches the

Trial on record

73. Minn.—Zuercher v. Woodward, 206 N.W. 168, 165 Minn. 262.

Grounds for reversal

(1) A confusion of findings of fact and conclusions of law, contrary to statute, is not ground for a reversal, if there is a finding of forcible entry, and the judgment is manifestly right.—Morris v. Turley, 271 P. 916, 94 Cal.App. 691.

(2) Judgment for plaintiff need not be reversed for errors in finding, where defendant pleaded no defense other than possession under subsequent contract, which disclosed that it had automatically ended, leaving first in full force, until it was terminated.—Zuercher v. Woodward, 206 N.W. 168, 165 Minn. 262.

(3) Judgment for plaintiffs could not be reversed on ground that they failed to exhibit their deed to property when demand for possession was served, where possession had been delivered to plaintiffs before either defendant claimed a right of possession adverse to rights of plaintiffs.—Smith v. Spencer, Mo.App., 130 S.W.2d 653.

opposite conclusion, it has been held to be the duty of this court to remand the cause to the justice to determine on the merits and that a failure to do so is error.[78] So, where on appeal it appears that the title to the land is in dispute or is called in question, the appellate court should refuse to take further cognizance of the case, and should remand it to the justice with directions to proceed according to the statute.[79]

Dismissal. It is good ground for dismissal that the cause was dismissed by the justice for want of jurisdiction,[80] or was transferred from the county court to the district court because the question of title was involved and because the county court had no jurisdiction to try such issue;[81] that the required steps to perfect the appeal were not taken;[82] that the appeal was not taken within the time required by statute;[83] that there was undue delay in the prosecution of the appeal;[84] that it does not appear that a complaint was filed in the justice's court, and that such complaint is not brought into the court to which the appeal is taken or its loss accounted for;[85] that the appeal bond was not properly signed by the parties,[86] or was not filed within the required time,[87] unless the objection is waived;[88] that before or pending his appeal defendant voluntarily surrendered the premises,[89] and all matters in controversy were settled by agreement between the parties.[90] On the other hand, the fact that there is a defect in the summons is not a ground to dismiss such appeal,[91] and neither is the fact that only one of two defendants or one of two plaintiffs has appealed;[92] and it has been held that an appeal will not be dismissed for failure of appellant to make periodical payments in accordance with the judgment of the justice of the peace before whom the action originated.[93] Where defendant's appeal from a judgment for restitution in plaintiff's favor is dismissed, this does not avoid the judgment of the justice and the writ of restitution is properly issued thereafter.[94] A motion by plaintiff to dismiss the appeal because defendants had abandoned the premises pending trial is a confession that the judgment appealed from was contrary to law and the evidence.[95]

Restitution. On affirmance, the cause may be remanded to enable the justice to issue a writ of restitution,[96] or, it has been held, the writ may issue from the intermediate court itself,[97] and the court on dismissal of an appeal by defendant may award restitution.[98] It has been held that, on reversing the judgment on defendant's appeal, the court has discretionary power to order restitution to him of the premises.[99] Under some statutes, on an appeal, the intermediate court, on finding for appellant, may order a restitution of the premises, but on a writ of error it can only reverse and remand the case for a new trial.[1]

Under some statutes, where an appeal is taken from the judgment of a justice in an action based on the statutes relating to forcible entry and detainer the trial is de novo,[2] and it may be brought to trial at such time or term as is authorized by the statute.[3] The rights of the parties on such trial are to be judged by their status at the time of hearing in the court to which the appeal is taken.[4] The jurisdiction of the intermediate court, however, is in a sense appellate only,[5] jurisdiction in the justice being necessary to give jurisdiction to the intermediate court on a trial de novo,[6] and only such questions as are within the jurisdiction of the justice can be determined.[7] On the trial no error made by the justice before whom the cause was originally tried can be taken advantage of,[8] and the court should not inquire into irregularities of the proceedings before the justice.[9] Defendant cannot set up an equitable defense,[10] such as estoppel.[11] Under some statutes it is not necessary to file new pleadings;[12] but the court has the same power to amend as had the justice before whom the action was instituted.[13] It has been held error to permit an intervener over the objection of the parties to file a plea putting the title in issue.[14] Complainant may be required to prove the allegations of his complaint whether defendant appears and defends or not;[15] and in an action transferred from a justice's court to a superior court, he has the burden of showing prior possession in himself and either a forcible entry or unlawful detainer by defendant or else title in himself superior to that of defendant.[16] Where the question of title is in issue, and the action in effect one of ejectment, it is error to refuse defendant's offer to prove prior possession and title and to strike out similar evidence.[17]

Such judgment only can be rendered as could have been rendered by the justice;[18] and under some statutes, if appellant fails to enter an appearance on the appeal, a judgment by default may be entered against him.[19] If a judgment for damages or rent is authorized by statute, it must be limited to the constitutional amount over which the justice has jurisdiction,[20] and a judgment in excess of this amount will be invalid unless the excess is remitted;[21] but where there is no limitation in the constitution, and the statute permits damages to be recovered, the amount is unlimited.[22]

22. Ind.—Sturgeon v. Hitchens, 22 Ind. 107.

The rules and statutory provisions relating to the review by certiorari of the judgment of a justice of the peace in general ordinarily apply to certiorari to such a judgment in a forcible entry and detainer action,[23] except to the extent that it is controlled by special statutory provisions relating to actions of this character.[24] Certiorari lies to review proceedings in these actions when authorized by statutory[25] or constitutional provisions,[26] and also where no other remedy is provided by statute, in which case it is the only remedy,[27] or where the statute expressly provides that certiorari shall be the only remedy.[28] Ordinarily certiorari will not be granted where the remedy by appeal is available,[29] but under some statutes, within certain limitations, defendant may either appeal and surrender possession of the property or he may retain the property and obtain a review by certiorari upon executing a supersedeas bond.[30] The jurisdiction of a particular court or judge to issue the writ generally depends on the constitutional or statutory provisions authorizing the writ.[31]

Grounds for writ. Want of jurisdiction in the justice trying the case is a proper ground for allowance of a writ of certiorari,[32] as is also a refusal of the justice to grant an appeal and supersedeas on tender of the statutory bond.[33] It is not an available objection that the complaint was made to, and the process issued by, one justice, and the case was tried by another, where their powers are coextensive.[34]

Right of review; parties. Where the remedy is appropriate, either party is entitled to a writ of certiorari.[35] Under a statute authorizing the removal by "the defendant," any defendant, where there are several, may cause the removal by certiorari, without other defendants joining in the application,[36] and such removal may be made by one of the defendants, who are jointly and severally liable, before other defendants are served with summons or notified by publication,[37] and such a removal operates to remove the entire case.[38]

Proceedings to procure writ. Statutory requirements of a mandatory nature as to the proceedings for procuring the writ must be strictly complied with.[39] A requirement that service of the justice's summons be had on defendant before the removal of the cause is waived by defendant's general appearance in the court to which the cause is so removed,[40] or where the removal is by one of several defendants, by the other defendants joining in the application, or voluntarily appearing and answering to the merits.[41] A failure to serve the certiorari writ on the justice does not render the removal of the cause irregular, where, in obedience to the writ, the justice or his clerk filed in the higher court the transcript required by statute.[42] The transcript need not be certified by the justice personally, but may be certified by his clerk as a ministerial act;[43] and even though the clerk has no power to affix the name of the justice to the transcript the defect may be waived by defendant making a general appearance in the higher court.[44]

The proceedings must be taken and the writ issued within the time fixed by the statute;[45] but under some statutes the writ may be awarded either in term time or in vacation;[46] and the action may be removed to the proper court by certiorari notwithstanding there have been several mistrials before the justice before whom the cause is pending.[47]

The petition for the writ must show on its face the error or illegality complained of, and that there was some attempt to make the grounds relied on for the certiorari available on the trial, or the reasons why they were not presented must be alleged.[48] The petition should also show some reason for not resorting to some other remedy if another remedy is available.[49] It has been held sufficient for the petition to state the merits alone,[50] unless it is filed after the time allowed by statute has elapsed, in which case it must also show a sufficient cause for the delay and such as would entitle the petitioner to relief under the general rules of removal relating to such writs.[51] A petition by defendant should also assert a right of possession to the premises;[52] and if the petition shows on its face that the judgment was for the right party the court will refuse the writ[53] and dismiss the petition, although the proceedings before the justices were informal and defective.[54]

Hearing and review. In cases brought up by certiorari the general rule is that errors must be assigned and the trial had on the record alone,[55] and only such errors can be reviewed as are called to the attention of the court by an assignment of error.[56] Under some statutes the only question which can be considered is whether the lower court had jurisdiction,[57] and error, if any, in rendering the judgment will not be considered.[58] Under other statutes the court to which the cause has been removed may decide on errors of fact as well as of law,[59] and may retry the facts by a jury.[60]

Determination and disposition of cause. If there is any evidence on which the verdict could be based the court on certiorari will not interfere with it.[61] It has been held, that where the complaint in the action substantially conforms to the statute, the reviewing court in reversing the judgment at the instance of defendant should remand the cause for further proceedings;[62] but under a statute authorizing the reviewing court only to set aside the justice's proceedings for irregularities it cannot remand the proceedings to the justice's court after setting them aside for irregularities.[63] It has also been held that the appellate court on reversing the judgment cannot grant a writ of restitution;[64] but, on the other hand, it has been held that, where plaintiff has been put in possession, a superior court on reversing the judgment may order restoration of possession and issue a writ of restitution, although the statute does not specially provide for such writ.[65] If a statute provides that on dismissal of certiorari the court shall enter judgment for the amount recovered in the inferior court with interest and costs, the court has no power to render judgment for the damages assessed.[66]

§ 86. Record

The record must show compliance with the statutory requirements, necessary to give the appellate court jurisdiction to review the errors complained of.

In accordance with the rules relating to the record on appeal or error from justices' courts generally, the record on appeal or error from the judgment of a justice of the peace in a forcible entry and detainer action must show at least a substantial compliance with the statutory requirements as to the existence of every fact necessary to give the appellate court jurisdiction,[67] such as that there was, as required by statute, a prayer for an appeal,[68] and that the justice fixed the amount of the appeal bond;[69] otherwise the appeal may be dismissed,[70] even though it may otherwise appear that the amount was so fixed.[71] However, if appellant has acted in good faith to perfect his appeal, the appellate court should grant his motion for a vacation of the order dismissing his appeal, and for a rule on the justice to furnish a full transcript of the record, which would show these requisites.[72] The record must also show that the cause of action was within the jurisdiction of the justice;[73] and must contain an assignment or specification of errors;[74] and where by statute an intermediate court on reversing the judgment of the justice tries the case de novo it is permissible on appeal to a higher appellate court to assign errors in the record arising previous to the judgment.[75] Under a statute which provides that no appeal shall be allowed from the judgment nor shall a new trial be granted in forcible entry and detainer, but such proceeding may be removed by certiorari into the supreme court, a bill of exceptions does not lie in forcible entry and detainer.[76]

§ 87. Bonds or Deposits on Appeal, Error, or Certiorari

Proceedings for approval of an undertaking or the mere filing of an undertaking will not necessarily stay proceedings on a judgment.

Under a statute providing that an appeal will not stay proceedings on the judgment unless the trial judge so directs, acts of various other judges taking part in subsequent proceedings for the approval of an undertaking will not effectuate a stay,[77] and neither will the mere filing of the undertaking.[78]

§ 88. —— Necessity

Bonds must be given on appeal or certiorari where the statute so directs; and if appellant desires to have the appeal operate as a stay, a supersedeas bond is also necessary.

Where the statute so requires, bonds must be given on appeal from,[79] or certiorari to,[80] the court in which the action is brought and, in case of a noncompliance with the statute, the appeal will be dismissed.[81] So if a defendant desires to have the appeal operate as a stay a supersedeas bond is also necessary,[82] unless as is the case in a number of jurisdictions the appeal bond itself contains the requirements of a supersedeas bond and has the effect thereof.[83] If a statute provides that an appeal from a justice shall not be effectual unless a bond is given to secure payment of costs of appeal and such bond is not given, the fact that another bond re-

Liability of sureties on defendant's redelivery bond

Where the appeal itself does not operate as a stay of proceedings in forcible entry and detainer cases, sureties on defendant's redelivery bond, given to enable him to retain possession and conditioned to pay plaintiffs any sum found due and costs, are liable in an action on the bond, where the judgment was not stayed and execution against defendant was returned nulla bona notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal.—Morrison v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 166 P. 1122, 97 Wash. 623.

83. Ill.—Wood v. Tucker, 66 Ill. 276.

quired by statute to authorize a stay of proceedings is given will not render the appeal effectual.[84] On an appeal from the superior court to the supreme court, an appeal bond in a sum sufficient to cover the rent of the premises pending the litigation is not necessary where there is no statute requiring it.[85] A bond conditioned to pay rent, where appellant is entitled to possession, on appeal from a judgment in unlawful detainer, is unnecessary and void.[86] A statute, one section of which provides that, where a party omits to file the bond required thereby necessary to perfect the appeal, he may be permitted to amend or perform such act, does not empower the supreme court to permit to be filed the additional undertaking for an appeal required by another section of the statute since it is a condition precedent to the appeal, and in addition to, and not a substitute for, the undertaking required by the section first mentioned.[87]

Waiver. The want of a bond may be waived by moving for judgment on the pleadings without objecting to the jurisdiction on appeal.[88]

§ 89. —— Requisites and Sufficiency

The bond must be in substantial compliance with statutory requirements, and is sufficient if it is.

A bond given without statutory authority cannot be enforced as a statutory obligation.[89] The bond or other security must be in substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute under which it is given;[90] such a bond or security, however, will be sufficient.[91] A slight variance between the language of the bond and the language of the statute will not invalidate it,[92] and the fact that the appeal bond does not contain all the conditions enumerated in the statute is not ground for dismissal of the appeal,[93] although it is said to be the better practice in all cases for the bond to comply strictly with the language of the statute.[94] If the bond contains conditions not enumerated in the statute it will be void,[95] or the condition will not be obligatory on the makers.[96] Obligors cannot object to omissions in the instrument which operate to their benefit.[97]

The bond should describe the action and the amount or substance of the recovery.[98] No specific sum need be designated as a penalty in the bond under some statutes,[99] although under others it seems that this is necessary.[1] Where the statute requires the bond to be sufficient to secure rent, damages, and costs "fixed by the court," an appeal cannot be perfected by defendant by filing a bond without first having the amount thereof fixed by the justice.[2] If the bond is a supersedeas bond, or an appeal bond which by force of the statutes operates as a stay, it must, if the statutes so provide, be conditioned on payment by defendant of all rents adjudged against him,[3] or such reasonable rent of the premises as the magistrate shall adjudge if the judgment is not reversed,[4] or of all rents accruing during the appeal,[5] or all rents becoming due, if any, from the commencement of the suit until the final termination thereof,[6] or twice the value of the yearly rent.[7] The bond must be conditioned for payment of costs and damages when the statutes so require;[8] and an undertaking to pay all costs is not

Particular bond construed

Clause in bond, that compliance will be had "with such other order a sufficient compliance with a statute requiring the undertaking to be conditioned for the payment of any judgment and costs that may be recovered.[9] A bond will be insufficient which omits a condition required by statute "that the appellant will not suffer waste to be committed."[10] The appeal bond must be executed by the party appealing;[11] it cannot be executed by another person, although he is the landlord of plaintiff;[12] but it has been held that the failure of appellant to attach his signature to the bond will not render it ineffective, where it is expressly provided by statute that the signing of the bond by appellant is not essential to its validity.[13] A bond on appeal which is approved by the justice, and which "contains words of obligation, and has a scroll [L.S.] opposite the name of one of the two signers, is sufficient where the paper is executed by both, who, contemporaneously, verify the instrument by affidavit, as their bond."[14] When the statute requires the bond to be executed by sureties, a bond without surety is not in substantial compliance therewith,[15] and appellants cannot act as sureties for each other.[16] A bond with sureties approved by the justice will be sufficient, although no justification of the sureties is annexed.[17] Approval by the justice is conclusive only as to the sufficiency of the sureties, however.[18] Deposit of security in lieu of a bond is not sufficient to stay proceedings pending appeal in the absence of statutory provision for such deposit.[19]

§ 90. —— Time of Filing

The bond must be filed within the time required by statute, and that time cannot be extended in the absence of statutory authorization.

An appeal bond must be filed within the time required by statute,[20] otherwise the appeal will be dismissed[21] or the judgment affirmed.[22] It has been held that the court has no power to extend the time for filing the bond,[23] unless specially authorized by statute.[24] Under a statute providing that if the appeal bond is insufficient a new bond may be filed within such time as shall not delay the trial, the refusal to continue on the filing of a new appeal bond is not erroneous.[25]

§ 91. —— Approval of and Fixing Amount of Bond

The court in which the action is tried, and not the appellate court, is the proper court to approve and fix the amount of the bond; and if the bond is in compliance with the statute, it should be promptly approved.

The court in which the action is tried and not the appellate court is the proper court to approve the bond.[26] If an appeal bond when presented to the justice is in proper form, it is his duty to approve it,[27] but he should not approve a bond which is not in compliance with the statutes.[28] An appeal bond when tendered must be promptly approved or rejected.[29]

The court in which the action is brought must fix the amount of the bond if this is required by statute,[30] and not the court[31] or clerk of the court[32] to which the appeal is taken. Where the bond is filed in the court to which the appeal is taken without the amount of the bond being fixed by the justice, the appeal will be dismissed.[33]

§ 92. —— Amended and New Bonds

Defective, as distinguished from void, bonds may be amended in the sound discretion of the court; and a new bond may be filed after expiration of the statutory time where the defective bond it replaces was filed within the prescribed time.

In the absence of some statute authorizing the amendment of appeal bonds, a motion to amend an appeal bond is addressed to the sound discretion of the court and its decision is not reviewable;[34] but generally an amendment of a defective appeal bond will be permitted if it is made to appear to the court that the appeal was taken in good faith and not for delay.[35] A new bond may be filed after the expiration of the statutory time where the defective bond which it is intended to replace was filed within the time prescribed.[36] If no motion is made to amend a defective appeal bond when objected to, the appeal will be dismissed.[37] No amendment will be permitted if the bond is void[38] or wholly fails to comply with the statute and is inconsistent and unintelligible as to purpose and obligation;[39] and it has been held that a bond invalid for failure to comply with a statutory requirement that the amount of the bond be fixed by the justice is not amendable.[40] The superior court is not concluded by the amount of the appeal bond fixed by the justice, but may require a bond in a larger sum to be filed and in default of compliance may dismiss the appeal.[41] If the amount is fixed by statute and the amount of the bond required by the justice is less than that so fixed the court to which an appeal is taken may require defendant to increase his bond to that amount but no more,[42] and where the court requires a new bond which is excessive in amount and dismisses the appeal on failure to give it, the judgment will be reversed.[43] The court cannot exercise the power to require a new bond before commencement of the term to which the appeal is taken.[44] While the court may in its discretion require new bondsmen, an order that appellant pay to appellee the expenses incurred in investigating sureties on an appeal bond and furnish him with an abstract of their real estate, constitutes an abuse of this discretion.[45] Successive appeal bonds given in the same proceedings are cumulative in the absence of an expressed intention of the parties, or statutory provision to the contrary.[46] Whether or not the new bond shall operate to supersede the original bond depends on the character of the order;[47] but the obligations of appeal bonds furnished at different stages of the proceedings to perfect different appeals do not supersede each other.[48] Where the bond given on an appeal to an intermediate court satisfies the requirements of the statute, no further bond may be necessary as a prerequisite to an appeal from the intermediate court to the court of last resort.[49]

§ 93. —— Effect of Supersedeas Bond

A supersedeas bond stays all proceedings in the action pending the appeal, and preserves all the parties' rights.

A supersedeas bond stays all proceedings in the action pending the appeal, preserves all rights of the parties, and if defendant is appellant secures to him the right to remain in possession of the premises pending the appeal.[50] After the necessary

Necessity of statutory authorization

Under Rev.St. art. 3962, making the judgment of the county court in an action in forcible entry and detainer "finally disposing of the cause . . . conclusive of the litigation," and providing that "no further appeal shall be allowed, except where the judgment shall be for damages in an amount exceeding one hundred dollars," and art 3963, providing that the writ of restitution "shall not be suspended or superseded in any case by any appeal taken from such final judgment in the county court," a defendant, appealing from judgment of county court entitling plaintiff to possession and awarding to plaintiff damages for the withholding of possession, was not entitled to a writ of supersedeas to stay the writ of restitution.—Rose v. Skiles, Tex.Civ. App., 245 S.W. 127.

bond has been given the court has no further control over the matter and cannot withdraw its direction or discharge the order after it has been complied with and the appeal and stay have been perfected.[51]

§ 94. —— Liability on Bonds

a. In general
b. Extent of liability

a. In General

A statutory recognizance is construed in the light of the statute authorizing it and prescribing its conditions; and generally nothing but reversal or setting aside of the judgment will discharge the sureties.

A statutory recognizance must be construed in the light of the provisions of the statute authorizing it and prescribing its conditions.[52] Nothing will discharge the sureties on the recognizance but reversal or setting aside of the judgment;[53] and defendant's abandonment or dismissal of his appeal because he has surrendered possession of the property to plaintiff does not release the sureties from liability on a supersedeas bond executed by defendant.[54]

A condition that appellant will prosecute the appeal with effect means that appellant will prosecute the appeal successfully, and pay the judgment of the court appealed from if he does not.[55] While there is authority to the effect that no liability exists on a bond where the steps required by statute to perfect the appeal have not been taken,[56] it has been held that failure to perfect and prosecute an appeal,[57] or the dismissal of the appeal[58] or of certiorari proceedings,[59] constitutes a breach of the bond. A judgment against a petitioner for certiorari is also a breach of a condition to prosecute with effect.[60] So it has been held that an appeal is not prosecuted with effect within the meaning of an appeal bond where the judgment is affirmed.[61]

b. Extent of Liability

The extent of liability on appeal and supersedeas bonds depends on the conditions and provisions of the bonds, the sureties being generally liab'e to the extent of the penalties therein provided but no further.

Sureties on appeal and supersedeas bonds are liable thereon to the extent of the penalties therein provided for,[62] but no further.[63] It has been held, however, that an entry of judgment against defendant and his sureties for damages not included in the bond can be objected to only by the sureties where such a judgment against defendant is expressly authorized by statute.[64] The right of plaintiff to recover the rental value of the premises is to be determined by the court on the trial of the action on the bond.[65] Where the rental value is recoverable, as is usually the case,[66] the recovery is not confined to the value of the premises for the purpose for which they were used while wrongfully detained, but may be had for the highest price the premises would bring for any lawful use to which they were adapted, and for which they were available.[67] Under some statutes there can be no

Partial restitution
Judgment was rendered in a forcible detainer suit for the restitution of an entire building. On appeal, the judgment was for the restitution of the portion of the building occupied by defendant. It was held that defendant had not prosecuted his appeal with effect, since the Forcible Detainer Act provided that judgment should be for only that part of the premises to which plaintiff was entitled, and this act entered into the bond.—Rehm v. Lease for immoral purpose Recovery may be had by a landlord knowingly leasing premises for immoral purposes on an appeal bond conditioned for the payment of rent; but his recovery, where he canceled the lease, is limited to the value of the premises for any lawful purpose.—White v. Holden, 206 Ill.App. 567.

recovery for rents pending appeal unless a supersedeas bond has been given,[68] and in the absence of the statutory supersedeas bond in such case, no judgment can go against defendant or the sureties on his bond for rents pending the appeal, nor can such judgment be sustained against defendant alone on the theory of his liability for rent independent of the bond, where plaintiff elected not to take a writ of restitution.[69] A condition to pay rents and profits that may be adjudged refers to rents and profits that may be adjudged by the appellate court in its disposition of the unlawful detainer action, and not in an action on the recognizance.[70] Under a condition for the payment of all rent due or becoming due before final determination of the suit, the obligee may recover for the taxes where the rent agreed to be paid included the taxes.[71] In an action on a supersedeas bond to pay the value of the use and occupation of the land, plaintiff is entitled to such compensation as will put him in as good position as if he had enjoyed use and occupation of the land.[72] Damages for injuries to the premises while unlawfully withheld are recoverable under a provision in the bond authorizing a recovery of "all damages and loss which the plaintiff may sustain, etc."[73] A provision in the bond that appellant will not commit waste covers losses by fire caused by his negligence.[74] Where defendant appeals from a judgment of restitution in the justice's court and files an appeal bond and on an affirmance appeals to the supreme court and files a supersedeas bond and the judgment is affirmed in the supreme court, the liability of the sureties on the appeal bond does not terminate until the restitution of the property.[75] Where, in an action on a bond given by defendant on appeal from a judgment for plaintiff before a justice in forcible entry, it appeared that plaintiff had recovered judgment against the sureties on the supersedeas bond given by defendant on appeal from the judgment of the superior court affirming the judgment of the justice, the amount of such judgment which had been paid should be deducted from the amount of the recovery on the appeal bond.[76] The obligee cannot recover as damages interest which he forgave.[77] A condition in a stay bond to pay all such damages as any person may sustain by reason of the suspension in case a supersedeas to the judgment shall not be allowed and be effectual within the suspension period, covers all damages, special or otherwise, sustained by plaintiff as the direct and proximate result of the suspension.[78] The surety on the bond is not liable for damages for failure of his principal to surrender possession in compliance with the decree when on appeal he is found to have been rightfully in possession.[79]

§ 95. —— Enforcement of Liability on Bonds

a. By summary proceedings
b. By action

a. By Summary Proceedings

In the absence of special statutory authorization therefor, summary judgment cannot be rendered against sureties on supersedeas or appeal bonds containing the usual conditions of supersedeas bonds.

Summary judgment cannot be rendered against sureties on supersedeas bonds or appeal bonds containing the usual conditions of supersedeas bonds,[80] unless there is special statutory authorization therefor as is the case in some jurisdictions[81] where by statutory provisions plaintiff if successful on appeal by defendant to the superior court is entitled to a judgment against defendant and his bondsman

Where no bond given at all

Although statute relating to forcible entry and unlawful detainer provides for judgment against defendant and the securities on his supersedeas bond for the value of the rent of the premises pending the appeal, and the circuit court may render judgment for same, independent of the rental damages that could have been awarded by the justice, and this could be done whether claimed in the complaint or not, it could only be done in the event of the execution by defendant of a supersedeas bond and on a motion by defendant that such judgment should be rendered. Where, in an appeal from the justice's court to the circuit court in an action of forcible entry and unlawful detainer, there was no bond given at all, the appeal to the circuit court being based on a security for costs, its judgment as to rental damages in excess of one hundred dollars was error.—Crocker v. for the rent of the premises pending the appeal,[82] and that, too, although there is no claim for damages in the complaint.[83] Jurisdiction of the supreme court to enter judgment for the damages caused by the stay has been upheld where the court granted a stay pending appeal on condition that appellant would pay any resulting damage.[84]

b. By Action

An action on the bond may be maintained against those liable thereon, and whatever operates to extinguish or discharge the claim on the bond is a defense thereto. In such action general rules as to evidence, instructions, assessment of damages, and judgment apply.

An action on an appeal bond executed in unlawful detainer proceedings may be maintained against those liable thereon,[85] and may be maintained against the sureties even though dismissed as to the principal without the sureties' consent.[86] An action for breach of the bond may be brought by the personal representative,[87] but not by an heir.[88]

Defenses. Whatever operates to extinguish or discharge the claim on the bond is a defense thereto.[89] Thus it is a good defense to an action on a supersedeas bond that plaintiff immediately after being put in possession was dispossessed under a writ against her in favor of others;[90] and in an action on an appeal bond superseding the judgment in an action for the rental value of the premises, defendants may set up as a defense the fact that the premises had been sold under mortgage foreclosure to parties other than plaintiffs, who were placed in possession under a sheriff's deed.[91] In an action for losses sustained by plaintiff because of the refusal to surrender possession as required by the judgment in a forcible detainer suit, the right of recovery depends on proof that plaintiff had the right of possession which was withheld to his damage, and it is a good defense that plaintiff had no such right of possession.[92] Parties on an undertaking on appeal are not estopped from claiming that no appeal was taken because the undertaking recited otherwise, where the party attempting to appeal did not secure the advantage or delay which would have resulted from a valid appeal.[93] The liability of sureties is not affected by the fact that the party giving the bond is under disability and his liability on the bond questionable.[94] Where a bond was given by defendant on appeal from a justice's court and another on appeal from the circuit court, an action to recover on the second bond is not barred by a recovery on the first one, where the action on the first bond did not seek to recover damages for the use and occupation of the premises after the date of the appeal to the circuit court.[95] Where an appeal bond which included all conditions required by the statute except a condition relating to waste was treated by all the parties as effecting a supersedeas, and execution was not ordered until after affirmance of the judgment, it served its purpose as such, and the surety cannot avoid liability because of the omission of the condition as to waste where no recovery for waste was sought in the action on the bond.[96] Where a judgment of the district court on appeal in a forcible detainer suit in favor of appellant, which nominally, at least, satisfied the condition of his undertaking, was attacked by appellee and set aside in the supreme court as having been rendered without jurisdiction, appellee is estopped afterward to assert that the proceedings were in any respect valid, and, accordingly, cannot recover on the undertaking by which such proceedings were begun.[97]

Evidence. It is proper to show the value of the use and occupation of the property during the time it was withheld in order to ascertain plaintiff's loss and damage, where the bond is conditioned to pay all damages and loss sustained by plaintiff by reason of the withholding of the premises.[98] If rental value is recoverable, evidence of the particular purpose for which the highest rental value can be obtained and evidence of the reasonable rental value of the premises for such purpose is competent.[99] So it has been held that evidence as to the rental value of the premises is admissible, notwithstanding the absence from the declaration of an averment of detention by defendant, the same being supplied by the plea of payment on his part, and the evidence showing his possession at the time in question.[1] Proof of the tenant's reasons for refusing possession is irrelevant.[2] Evidence that the principal persuaded the sureties to sign the bond by fraud is inadmissible against the obligee.[3] General rules as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence apply.[4]

Instructions. In accordance with the general rules relating to instructions, the court should give, when requested, all instructions that correctly state the law, are pertinent to the issues, and are not covered by some instruction already given.[5]

Assessment of damages by jury. It has been held that defendant in an action on a bond given on the prosecution of a writ of error in a forcible entry proceeding is entitled to have the damages assessed by a jury, as such damages are unliquidated,[6] and that too notwithstanding the striking out of the affidavit of defense.[7] The action of the court in doubling the amount returned by the jury for use and occupation, finding for itself the amount of unpaid costs, and in refusing to permit a return of the full amount of the liability on the bond constitutes an invasion of the province of the jury.[8]

Judgment. A judgment on a supersedeas bond failing to set out the names of the sureties on the bond against whom judgment was rendered, while informal, was not fatally defective, provided a reference to the bond would make certain the names of the sureties against whom the judgment was rendered.[9] The validity of an order amending the judgment becomes a moot question when the judgment is reversed.[10]

§ 96. Restitution or Rerestitution on Reversal

Restitution or rerestitution on reversal may be ordered only if statutory provision therefor exists.

While the merits of a case should not ordinarily be inquired into on a motion based alone on the fact of the reversal of a judgment, a hearing on the merits may be had on defendant's motion for a writ of restitution following reversal on certiorari of a judgment for plaintiff in an action for forcible detainer, under a statute prohibiting the issuance of a writ of restitution on reversal of a judgment for plaintiff in an action for forcible detainer, unless the court considers that on the merits such writ should be awarded;[11] but this should not be done on the certiorari record alone, it being necessary that the foundation for proofs outside the record be laid by petition, affidavit, and motion.[12] The procedure to be followed in forcible entry and detainer cases being strictly statutory, it has been held under controlling statutes that on writ of error to a justice of the peace in such an action a district court sustaining a writ cannot order restitution,[13] a general statute authorizing a district court, on writ of error to a justice of the peace, to order restitution being inapplicable to a forcible entry and detainer action.[14]

O. PROCEEDINGS BY INQUISITION AND SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS AGAINST INTRUDERS AND TRESPASSERS

§ 97. In General

Under the statutes in some states trials for forcible entry and detainer may be had by way of an inquisition before a justice, the proceeding being of a summary character strictly controlled by statute.

Under statutes in force in some of the states, trials for forcible entry and detainer may be had by way of an inquisition before a justice. The proceeding is purely statutory and of a summary character, and the provisions of the statutes must be strictly followed.[15] Although the proceedings are authorized and regulated by a civil code, it has been held that they conform to the practice in criminal proceedings.[16]

§ 98. Petition, Complaint, or Affidavit

The proceedings are instituted by a written and sworn petition or complaint describing the premises and stating the interest of the petitioner therein.

The proceedings are instituted by presenting to the justice a petition or complaint which must be in writing and on oath,[17] and must contain a description of the premises,[18] and state the interest of the petitioner therein.[19] Also, it seems, it should contain an allegation of defendant's refusal to surrender possession on demand when proof of such refusal is required to authorize a judgment of restitution.[20]

§ 99. Warrant

On receipt of the petition or complaint, the justice issues a warrant which is to notify the accused of the charge to be inquired into and which must state the cause of complaint substantially in the form prescribed by statute.

The justice, on receipt of the petition or complaint, issues a warrant,[21] the object of which is to notify accused of the charge to be inquired into.[22] The warrant states the cause of complaint[23] and the scope of the inquiry is limited strictly by its allegations.[24] The warrant must show such a right or interest in complainant as to entitle him to maintain the proceeding under the statute,[25] and must allege that he was in the peaceable possession of the premises at the time of the entry[26] and that the entry or detainer complained of was forcible;[27] but it need not allege defendant's refusal to surrender possession on demand, although proof of such refusal is required to authorize a judgment of restitution.[28] The description of the property in the warrant need be only a general description such as is sufficient to apprise defendant of the claim set up against him.[29] It need not be stated in the warrant that the complaint on which it was issued was made under oath.[30] Both forcible entry and forcible detainer may be charged in the same warrant,[31] or accused may be charged in the alternative with forcible entry or detainer.[32] Where the form of the warrant is prescribed by statute, it need not be strictly pursued, but a substantial compliance therewith is sufficient,[33] and a warrant in the exact language and form prescribed is sufficient.[34]

The warrant must be issued by the magistrate before whom the complaint was made,[35] and must be served in the manner[36] and within the time[37] prescribed by statute.

A defective warrant may be amended before trial by the justice,[38] or it may be amended in the circuit court on the trial of the traverse, provided the amendment in no way changes the case as tried before the justice,[39] but no amendment will be allowed which introduces a new cause of action.[40]

§ 100. Conduct of Inquisition

On the inquisition the jury must be sworn, and must try the questions before it, conforming their findings to the statutory requirements, although technical precision is not required. After notice and opportunity to file a traverse given to defendant, it is the duty of the justice to render judgment on the verdict.

Where the statute does not require that the inquisition shall be held upon the premises the justice may in his discretion hold it elsewhere.[41] The jury on the inquisition must be sworn, which must appear from the record.[42] Whether plaintiff was in actual possession and whether that possession was forcibly disturbed by the entry or detainer complained of are the only questions before the jury,[43] and they cannot try questions of title[44] or plaintiff's right of entry.[45]

In a warrant for a forcible entry and detainer defendant may be convicted of either,[46] but if only one offense is charged he can be convicted only of that offense.[47]

The finding of the jury must contain a definite description of the premises[48] and must be signed by them if the statute so directs.[49] Verdicts on inquisitions are liberally construed; a technical precision and regularity is not required.[50]

Before the justice can render judgment on the verdict, defendant must be given notice of the finding and an opportunity to file a traverse,[51] and this must be shown by the record.[52] If after notice he declines to traverse,[53] or neglects to do so within the time prescribed by statute,[54] the justice must render judgment on the verdict. The justice has no power to grant a new trial[55] or to disturb the judgment after it has been entered.[56] The loss of the warrant after an inquest or forcible entry and detainer is not ground for arrest of judgment.[57] It is not necessary that the justice should sign the inquisition.[58]

On appeal from the county court to the circuit court, an amendment of the warrant of forcible entry, not changing the cause of action, but only perfecting the one originally attempted to be stated, should be allowed.[59]

§ 101. Traverse and Proceedings Thereon

The party aggrieved by an adverse finding has a right to traverse the inquisition, which is, in effect, an appeal calling in question the finding of fact; and when he does so the justice must then summon another jury to try the traverse or certify the proceedings to another court to be tried in accordance with the local practice.

The party aggrieved by an adverse finding has a right to traverse the inquisition,[60] which is in effect an appeal, differing from other appeals only in that it merely calls in question the finding of the jury and not a judgment;[61] and under some statutes this is his sole remedy.[62] Where the form of the traverse is prescribed by statute it is only necessary that the substance of the form given should be pursued.[63] It is not necessary that the traverser should sign the traverse.[64] If the inquisition is traversed the justice must then summon another jury to try the traverse before him[65] or must certify the proceedings to the circuit court.[66]

Transfer of proceedings to circuit court. Where the statute expressly requires that after a traverse is filed and bond given the proceedings must be transferred to the circuit court for the trial of the traverse. The traverser is entitled to have a trial of the traverse in the circuit court, although while the traverse is pending in the circuit court there may be a judgment rendered in that court in another case between the same parties awarding to the traversee the possession of the premises involved in the forcible detainer proceeding.[67] A traverse is necessary to stay the execution,[68] and the circuit court has no jurisdiction to retry the truth of an inquisition unless a traverse was filed[69] before the justice[70] and within the time limited by the statute.[71] A traverse filed within the statutory time after the judge had orally announced the findings preserves the traverser's rights, however, even though the filing was before entry of the formal judgment.[72] It is not essential to the virtue or validity of the traverse that it be indorsed filed by the judge or justice,[73] and the failure of the justice to indorse on a traverse bond or the traverse itself the time of filing affords no ground for a dismissal of the action.[74] Where the record does not show timely filing of the traverse, the court should hear proof on the question;[75] and the fact that the justice who heard the action transmitted the record to the circuit court is prima facie evidence that the traverse and bond were presented in proper time and that the failure so to indorse them was a mere inadvertence or oversight on his part.[76] The omission of a judge or justice to return the papers to the circuit court as directed by statute is not fatal, but may be corrected by subsequent compliance.[77] The duty may be enforced by the circuit court requiring the papers to be sent up,[78] or the interested parties may procure a transcript and present it in the circuit court.[79] The traverser has a right to dismiss the traverse if he so desires, and when he moves the court to dismiss it the court should do so.[80]

The traversee is required to join issue on the traverse in the circuit court,[81] which he does by appearing in that court and stating to the jury that the finding of the jury on the inquisition is true.[82] The truth of the inquisition is there tried de novo,[83] and the trial is conducted in the same manner as the trial of any other issue in that court.[84] The circuit court is confined to the issue tried in the inferior court,[85] the only issue being the truth of the inquisition,[86] and no evidence is admissible except such as is relevant to this issue.[87] On a traverse by defendant he is not required to prove his innocence but the burden of proof remains with plaintiff.[88] If the traverser fails on the calling of the case for trial to appear either by himself or counsel, the court may render judgment by default in favor of the traversee.[89]

Where required by statute, a traverse bond must be executed and approved by the justice trying the case in the first instance; and if the traverse is not prosecuted with effect the sureties on the bond are liable according to its terms.

Where required to do so by statute, the party traversing the inquisition must give a bond,[90] within a designated time,[91] for the costs of the proceeding and all damages that may be caused to the traversee by the traverse in case it shall not be prosecuted with effect.[92] If executed by the surety it will be sufficient, although not executed by the prin-

Day of rendition of judgment on inquest is counted as first of three days within which traverse must be filed to give jurisdiction on appeal, and "juridical days," intended as days for appeal to circuit court, are days on which court is in session.—Black v. cipal.[93] The bond must be taken by the justice and not by the judge of the circuit court before whom the traverse is tried, and must be approved by him,[94] although it is not necessary that a statement to that effect should appear in the bond itself.[95] While the approval or disapproval of the bond requires the exercise of some discretion, yet the power to approve or disapprove is not absolute, and the bond must be approved if the solvency of the surety is not open to doubt and the bond is otherwise in compliance with the statutory requirements.[96] If no valid or amendable bond is executed, the traverse should be dismissed in the circuit court to which the action is transmitted,[97] but a mere defect in the bond does not go to the jurisdiction of the circuit court.[98] If the bond is defective the traverser should be allowed to execute a new and sufficient bond within a reasonable time to be fixed by the court,[99] and if it misrecites the date of the inquisition the proceedings should not be dismissed but the traverser should be permitted to introduce evidence to identify the inquisition and reacknowledge the bond.[1] After execution and filing of the bond, the justice hearing the case has no power over it except to transmit the record to the circuit court,[2] and he must stay all further proceedings on the inquisition and return the papers and proceedings or a transcript thereof to the circuit court.[3] Where the bond has been accepted and approved by the justice, recitals therein of the justice's findings on the inquisition and of the filing of a traverse are sufficient to show the facts recited in the absence of convincing evidence to the contrary.[4] A party, having selected his adversary and executed a traverse bond to him, is estopped to deny that the finding was for him.[5] The traverse bond reciting that the traverse has been filed estops the traverser to deny that he traversed the inquisition.[6] The circuit court cannot release a surety on the traverse bond for the purpose of making him a witness and take another bond.[7]

Liability on bond. If the traverse was not prosecuted with effect the sureties on the bond are liable according to its terms,[8] and the damages for withholding the possession include the reasonable value of the rents and profits of the land illegally detained[9] from the date the traverse bond was executed until the traversee obtained possession of the land;[10] and this rule applies even where the traverser who was found guilty of the forcible detainer in the trial in the circuit court executed a supersedeas bond and appealed his case to a higher court.[11] It is not a defense to a traverse bond executed by defendant that plaintiff had no title to the property as the title is not involved.[12] In a suit on a traverse bond it is not necessary that all the obligors be made parties; any one of them may be sued.[13] The evidence in such an action should be confined to the reasonable rental value of the property during the time that plaintiff was kept out of possession, and to such damage as was caused by waste, if any. The kind of crops which might have been grown, as well as those which were on the property at the time the bond was executed may be shown, the jury being entitled to know all legitimate facts in determining what was the reasonable rental value, but evidence as to what the reasonable profits and earnings were for the period is incompetent as entirely too speculative.[14] No appeal will lie in an action on a traverse bond where the damages demanded are less than the amount required to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court.[15]

§ 103. —— Waiver of Defects and Irregularities

The filing of the traverse is a waiver of all defects and irregularities in the form of the inquisition or in the warrant which do not affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the court.

The filing of the traverse puts in issue the truth of the inquisition and is a waiver of all defects and irregularities in the form of the inquisition[16] or in the warrant;[17] but it is not a waiver of defects of substance[18] such as affect the jurisdiction of the court[19] or where the inquisition is so defective that no judgment could be rendered thereon by the justice.[20]

§ 104. Restitution

Restitution cannot be awarded unless the proceeding is brought under a statute expressly authorizing it,[21] but under statutes so providing the justice who holds the inquisition may restore the injured party to possession.[22] To authorize a judgment of restitution the verdict on the inquisition must find such an estate or interest in plaintiff as to bring him within the provisions of the statute.[23] If the inquisition is traversed, restitution cannot be awarded until the traverse is tried and determined against defendant by another jury.[24] Technical irregularities in the form of judgment for restitution entered on the trial of the traverse will not invalidate it if it conforms substantially to the statute,[25] and a clerical error in failing to provide for restitution in entering up the judgment may be corrected by the court at a subsequent term.[26]

§ 105. Appeal and Certiorari

Summary proceedings before a justice for forcible entry and detainer may be reviewed by certiorari after the finding of the inquisition, but an appeal will not lie except where it is authorized by statute.

In the absence of statute, summary proceedings before justices for forcible entry and detainer cannot be reviewed by appeal,[27] but may be reviewed by certiorari.[28] Certiorari will not lie until after the finding of the inquisition,[29] but the proceedings may be removed at any time thereafter.[30] The certiorari merely brings up the record for inspection and the facts found by the jury cannot be tried anew.[31]

An appeal from the inquisition may be taken where allowed by statute,[32] and where an appeal can be taken and on that appeal jurisdictional questions as well as those arising on the merits can be fully disposed of, a certiorari should not be allowed unless circumstances exist which show that failure of justice will result from denying it.[33] An appeal can be taken only after the entry of the judgment or final order of the justice.[34] An appeal will not lie from a judgment on a traverse in the superior court where the judgment is merely for damages and costs and there is no judgment for restitution,[35] and an order granting a new trial on a traverse is not appealable.[36] truders, or trespassers may be ejected by virtue of special statutory summary proceedings in some jurisdictions. Where such remedy exists, the statutes must be strictly followed.

In the absence of statutory authorization, summary process is unavailing to eject one who takes possession of property without right or title.[37] In some states, however, as shown infra this section, there are special statutory proceedings for the ejection of intruders or trespassers.

Under a statute providing for the ejection, on the determination in plaintiff's favor of an issue made by affidavit and counteraffidavit, of persons who do not in good faith claim a right to possession of land in their hands and yet refuse to abandon it, where the parties have made the required affidavits, the issue to be determined is not title but defendant's good faith in claiming the right to go upon the land,[38] although title has been held admissible as evidence of the right of possession[39] or as tending to show good faith.[40] Recovery from a mere intruder can be had on prior possession alone.[41] On the other hand, it will be sufficient to defeat proceedings of this character if defendant shows a claim in good faith of right to possession of the land in suit,[42] since the statute applies only to intruders or squatters entering in bad faith without claim of right.[43] No process or return of service is required.[44] Plaintiff's affidavit must be sufficiently certain in describing the land to enable the sheriff to identify the premises.[45] When made, defendant must tender the sheriff the counteraffidavit required by statute within three days or he will be turned out,[46] and after the time has expired and there has been a proper eviction it will be too late to file the counteraffidavit unless the delay has been caused by some misconduct of the sheriff.[47] On the other hand, it has been held that the counteraffidavit may be filed after the expiration of the statutory period provided defendant was left in possession by the sheriff and the affidavit was filed prior to actual evictment.[48] It is not necessary for the counteraffidavit to follow the statute literally.[49] However, it has been held that defendant will not be allowed to tender a defective affidavit to retain possession under it and on a decision against him tender a sufficient affidavit to protect his possession;[50] and it has further been held that no provision is made in the statutes by which any amendment of the affidavit will be permissible.[51] Where a counteraffidavit has been interposed and the papers returned to the superior court for trial, the counteraffidavit should not be dismissed because of defendant's nonappearance on the call of the case.[52] On the trial, evidence is admissible to show the good faith of defendant;[53] and in the absence of evidence that defendant did not enter and remain upon the land honestly and in good faith the court should direct a verdict for him.[54] After a verdict for plaintiff, it is error to award a new trial where there is no evidence that plaintiff in good faith claimed a legal right to the possession of the land;[55] and where, in proceedings for eviction of an intruder, no legal counteraffidavit was filed, but on trial verdict was rendered for plaintiff and motion for new trial was overruled and defendant brought error, he had no standing to contest the right of possession, nor any right to a judgment on the merits, but the judgment should be set aside and counteraffidavit dismissed.[56]

Under a statute providing for the recovery of land by summary proceedings where a person who has intruded into or squatted upon the land without the permission of the person entitled to the possession has continued to occupy it without the permission of the latter, a squatter is one who settles on the lands of another without any legal authority,[57] and an intruder is one who enters upon property where he has no right;[58] and the statute is applicable only in cases in which defendant comes within the meaning of a squatter or intruder.[59] The statute furnishes no remedy against a trespasser;[60] the only question to be determined is "Did the respondent gain possession of the premises as an intruder?"[61] The petitioner can prevail only where it is shown that defendant has intruded or squatted upon the premises without permission of the person entitled thereto.[62] One entering on the lands rightfully as the spouse of the owner, cannot after separation of the spouses as husband and wife be summarily removed as an intruder or squatter,[63] either at the suit of the owner spouse[64] or at the suit of his assignees.[65] If one sought to be dispossessed has entered lawfully, no notice to leave can thereafter render him subject to the provisions of the statute.[66] A mere denial of the plaintiff's claim that he was entitled to possession of the premises as a lessee raises no issue involving the title to real estate such as will deprive an inferior court of jurisdiction.[67] In support of plaintiff's claim of title derived from the state, the letters patent which were the source of such title were admissible in the absence of any proof or claim of defect therein.[68] A stay cannot be had on appeal from an order that a warrant be issued to dispossess defendant in proceedings based on this statute unless proceedings were instituted for nonpayment of rent.[69]

Under a statute authorizing the owner of land trespassed upon to apply to any magistrate to serve a notice on the trespasser to quit the premises, and requiring the magistrate forthwith to eject him upon his refusal to comply with such notice, it has been held that the proceeding may be instituted by the owner's agent and manager,[70] and the service of notice to quit is not necessary to give jurisdiction to the justice before whom the proceedings are pending.[71] An affidavit showing that the land is situated in a certain county and in the possession of a trespasser,[72] or a rule to show cause why he should not be ejected,[73] will give a magistrate of that county jurisdiction to serve notice on the trespasser to quit. This notice need not designate the time within which a trespasser must quit, and if after the time limited by statute he refuses to quit, the magistrate shall then issue his warrant to a sheriff or constable requiring him to forthwith eject such trespasser.[74] Where a trespasser appears and objects to the jurisdiction of the magistrate because he had not been served with notice to quit, and, on the overruling of the objection, files a return, jurisdiction of his person is thereby acquired.[75] On appeal from a magistrate's order overruling a demurrer to his jurisdiction in proceedings to eject trespassers on the ground that no notice to quit had been served, reversing the judgment of the magistrate, and granting a new trial, it is the duty of the magistrate to grant the parties another hearing, and not to dismiss.[76] ment was rendered on the verdict and consequently the writ of possession was void,[78] the judgment on which the writ of restitution was issued was void because based on a default,[79] or plaintiff caused the warrant of restitution to be issued and executed prematurely.[80] He is not liable, however, for irregularities in the proceedings which might be complained of on appeal, but do not constitute an actionable tort;[81] nor is he liable for the manner in which an officer removed defendant's personal property from the premises where, in executing the warrant of restitution, the officer used his own discretion and judgment as to the method and means of removing such personal property.[82] Process as protection of officer executing writ of forcible entry and detainer is discussed in the C.J.S. title Sheriffs and Constables § 122, also 57 C.J. p 917 note 73.

§ 108. Actions

The court should not allow the jury to apply an erroneous theory of liability. It may permit the introduction in evidence of a bond given by the plaintiff in the original action; and sometimes an action on such bond is the only remedy available for the recovery of damages by the defendant in the first action.

In the absence of an applicable statutory provision, in force at the time, authorizing the recovery of damages otherwise, the remedy of defendant in an action of forcible entry and detainer which has been decided in his favor, and in which plaintiff has given a bond for his security, is on such bond.[83] In an action for damages, such a bond is properly admitted in evidence where it conforms, or is not contrary, to law;[84] but the court should not allow the jury to determine the question of liability on an erroneous theory.[85]

The damages recoverable for wrongful dispossession of defendant in a forcible entry and detainer proceeding are such a sum as will fairly and reasonably compensate him for the losses he has sustained as a result of the dispossession.

In the case of farm property, the measure of damages for wrongful dispossession in a forcible entry and detainer proceeding is the fair and reasonable rental value of the premises from the date of ouster under the judgment and the fair and reasonable value of the crops and vegetables of which defendant in the original proceeding was deprived by the dispossession;[86] and in the case of household goods and personal effects removed from a house and exposed to the elements, it is the difference in the fair market value of such personal property immediately before and after its removal and exposure to the weather.[87]

III. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY

A. OFFENSES AND RESPONSIBILITY THEREFOR

§ 110. Origin and Development

Early English statutes, more extensive than the common law, have had considerable effect in the formulation of the criminal laws of several states in respect of forcible entry and detainer.

A forcible entry was an indictable offense at common law,[88] and this common-law liability is not abrogated or affected by statutes making the offense indictable,[89] or providing the injured party a remedy by a civil action or proceeding.[90] Since, however, they furnish the injured party a more speedy and efficient remedy, they have caused the criminal proceeding to fall into disuse in many jurisdictions.[91] There is some conflict of authority as to whether a forcible detainer was indictable at common law.[92] A civil action for forcible detainer is no bar to a criminal prosecution for forcible detainer.[93]

93. Ga.—Lewis v. State, 31 S.E. 576, 105 Ga. 657.

Under early English statutes. As judicially noted, forcible entry and detainer was a misdemeanor under the early statutes of England.[94] The first of the English statutes, Statute of 5 Richard II c 8, provided that there should be no entry except where an entry was given by law, and even then not with a strong hand or a multitude of people, and made the offense indictable.[95] The statute abrogated the old rule of the common law that a person entitled to possession might recover and maintain his possession by force if he used no more than was actually necessary for that purpose,[96] but it is said to have had no further effect.[97] As noted infra § 115, the second statute, Statute of 15 Richard II c 2, provided for a summary conviction of offenders by magistrates on view. The third statute, Statute of 8 Henry VI c 9, extended the remedy to cases where there was both a forcible entry and detainer and where there was peaceful entry followed by a forcible detainer,[98] and was the first legislation relating to forcible detainer.[99] As noted infra § 122, this and later statutes provided also for a restitution of possession to the injured party.

In United States. The English statutes making forcible entry and detainer indictable are in force in some of the states, either as a part of the common law of those states, see Common Law § 13 b, or by virtue of statutory provisions adopting certain portions of the English statute law,[1] while in others the original English statute has been substantially adopted or reënacted,[2] or there are other statutes of similar character making the offense indictable.[3] The offense, however, is recognized as indictable as a common-law offense.[4]

In New Hampshire both the common law and the English statutes, which as modified by the statutes of that state were formerly in force,[5] were repealed by the act of 1842, and a forcible entry and detainer is not as such an indictable offense in that state.[6]

§ 111. Nature and Elements of Offense

a. Character of property, possession, and title
b. Entry and force
c. Intent or purpose

a. Character of Property, Possession, and Title

It is essential that the wrong shall have been done in respect of real property, and that the person whose possession is charged to have been interfered with shall have had actual and peaceable possession; but it is not necessary that he shall have had rightful possession or legal title.

To constitute the offense of forcible entry and detainer the wrong done must be with regard to lands and tenements and not to personal property.[7] Also, it is an essential element of the offense of forcible entry or, as it is sometimes called, forcible trespass, that at the time of the offense the premises shall have been in the actual possession of him whose possession is charged to have been interfered with.[8] To constitute actual possession it is not necessary that the party be personally present on the premises at the time of the offense if he is in actual exercise of authority and control over them.[9] He will be deemed to be present and in possession, although temporarily absent, if represented by a member of his family,[10] or by a tenant;[11] and, where a tenant leaves the premises at the end of his term, the landlord, although not in actual occupancy, is regarded as in possession, and a third person who enters and violently keeps possession with force and without authority of law is guilty of forcible detainer.[12] The possession must also be peaceable as distinguished from a mere scrambling possession.[13] An actual peaceable possession, however, is all that is essential to maintain the prosecution.[14] It is immaterial whether or not such a possession is also rightful.[15]

Title. It is not necessary that the prosecutor should have any legal title in the property.[16] A prosecution for forcible entry and detainer, or for forcible trespass, does not involve any question of title,[17] except as bearing on the question of restitution, see infra § 122, and cannot be maintained or used as a means of trying title to the premises where the alleged force was committed,[18] or as a means of collateral attack on proceedings in a civil action concerning the same.[19]

b. Entry and Force

To constitute a forcible entry, there must be an actual entry with more force than amounts to a mere trespass. Furthermore, the force involved in either a forcible entry or a forcible detainer must be private force, rather than force under legal process; but the violence which must accompany the entry or detainer may be either actual violence or matters which tend to a breach of the peace or give rise to a reasonable fear or apprehension of personal injury if the possession is defended or sought to be regained.

To constitute the offense of forcible entry an actual entry is necessary;[20] and, to constitute an entry, there must be an actual taking possession of lands or tenements by entering into or setting foot thereon.[21] An unsuccessful attempt to enter is not sufficient.[22] Furthermore, to constitute a forcible entry there must be more force than amounts to a mere trespass.[23] The entry must be accompanied with some circumstances of violence either actual or threatened,[24] or, more explicitly, there must be either actual violence or such conduct, threats, demonstration of force, or other circumstances as tend or are calculated to alarm, intimidate, or terrorize,[25] or as give ground to apprehend personal injury or danger in defending possession,[26] or amount to, involve, or tend to, a breach of the peace.[27] While it is criminal for a person, not acting under judicial process, to accomplish an entry by the exertion of force against the person of an actual occupant who opposes and resists the entry,[28] it is not necessary that there be any act of great public violence or terror,[29] or that an actual personal injury to the person in possession should result.[30] It is sufficient if the entry is accompanied with such a display of force or circumstances of violence or terror as to give the party in possession reasonable ground to believe that he must yield in order to avoid a personal injury[31] or breach of the peace,[32] or that any resistance would be useless.[33] Terror may be caused by accused carrying with him such an unusual number of attendants or by arming himself in such a manner as plainly to intimate his design to back his pretensions by force,[34] by actually threatening to kill, maim, or beat those who continue in possession,[35] or by making use of expressions plainly implying a purpose of using force against those who make resistance;[36] and in such cases it is not necessary that the party in possession should make an actual forcible resistance,[37] or wait until actual violence is resorted to.[38] The same circumstances of force, violence, or terror are essential to a forcible detainer as to a forcible entry.[39] There may be a forcible detainer, although the entry is peaceable;[40] and as in the case of forcible entry it is not essential that an assault should have been committed but it is sufficient that the acts of defendant were such as to cause a reasonable apprehension of physical violence.[41] Also, whoever retains a wrongful possession by keeping an unusual number of people or unusual weapons or by threatening to do some bodily hurt to the former possessor if he dares to return is guilty of a forcible detainer, although no attempt is made to reënter.[42]

Number of persons making entry. Three or more persons constitute a "multitude" within an alternative provision of the statute creating the offense.[43] However, it is not necessary that the entry should be made by a multitude of people,[44] as there may be a demonstration of force by less than three persons,[45] and a single person may commit the offense.[46]

Entry or detainer under legal process. The force involved in the offense of forcible entry is private force unlawfully exerted, and the public force of the state lawfully exercised cannot be the means of a wrongful entry.[47] An entry made with a lawful warrant executed in a lawful way by a lawful officer is not a forcible entry, although the affidavit on which the warrant was issued is false;[48] nor is a person guilty of forcible detainer by reason of forcibly retaining possession of property which has been delivered to him and taken in good faith by virtue of a writ regular on its face and issued on the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, although the writ may have been wrongfully issued.[49] Where, however, a justice acting without any jurisdiction assists a person in forcibly ejecting another who is in possession, it is a forcible entry on the part of both the justice and the person so entering.[50]

Breaking into buildings. It has been held that breaking into a dwelling house is a forcible entry, although there is at the time no person in the house or on the premises.[51] On the contrary, however, it has been held that such an entry, if accompanied with no more violence than is incident to effecting the entry, is a mere trespass,[52] and that, in the absence of circumstances amounting to a public breach of the peace, it is not a forcible entry to break into an unoccupied dwelling or into vacant premises.[53] So it is not a forcible entry to break into an outhouse,[54] or merely to take off the lock of a house and substitute another,[55] or, after being admitted into a house, to break open the door of a locked room.[56] One who fraudulently and without right enters into a dwelling house by means of a false key is liable for forcible entry under a statute making every person guilty of forcible entry who "by breaking open doors, windows, or other parts of a house, enters upon or into any real property."[57]

c. Intent or Purpose

Intent or purpose is not important unless made so by the wording and construction of the statute defining the offense.

A person who, for the purpose of obstructing process against a tenant, takes possession of land after the rendition of judgment against the tenant in an unlawful detainer action is guilty of a statutory offense of taking possession of land without authority from the owner.[58] However, a criminal intent is not necessary to constitute forcible detainer; the only intent required is the intent to do the act itself.[59]

§ 112. Defenses

An endeavor to settle a labor dispute is not a defense.

Defendants cannot justify unlawful conduct by asserting that they were endeavoring to settle a labor dispute.[60] The bar of a prosecution by a civil action is discussed supra § 110, and by former acquittal is discussed in Criminal Law § 240.

§ 113. Persons Liable

A landlord will be liable for entering in a forcible manner where a tenant holds over;[61] a joint tenant or tenant in common will be liable for forcibly ejecting his cotenant;[62] and, where a husband and wife are living apart from each other, the husband may be prosecuted for forcibly entering on the lands of the wife.[63] Where the trustees of a church have, in a regular meeting, decided to close a building belonging to the church, it is a forcible entry for any trustee who did not assent to such action[64] or for the members of the congregation[65] afterward to forcibly break into such building; and it is said that a person out of actual possession may be criminally liable, even though he is lawfully entitled to possession;[66] but, on the other hand, it is held that a man who breaks into his own dwelling which is forcibly detained from him by one who has the bare custody of it is not liable for a forcible entry.[67]

A person who is present and is aiding and abetting the wrongful acts is guilty,[68] as are also all persons who accompany another for the purpose of making a forcible entry, whether they actually enter on the premises or not;[69] but it is otherwise as to a person who does not participate in the entry and has no knowledge thereof.[70]

B. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT

§ 114. Persons Entitled to Prosecute

Whether possession by, or legal title in, the prosecutor is essential is considered supra § 111 a.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 115. Summary Proceedings

In most of the states no provision exists for the summary proceeding before a justice of the peace which was authorized by an early English statute.

As judicially noted, the second of the early English statutes, Statute of 15 Richard II c 2, provided for a summary conviction, for a forcible entry, by a justice of the peace on view, the justice being authorized to go on the premises, remove the force, and convict, fine, and imprison the wrongdoer.[71] This statute has been held to be in force in a few jurisdictions in this country,[72] but in most of the states it seems that the proceeding is unknown.[73] In proceedings under this statute there could be no award of restitution, see infra § 122.

§ 116. Proceedings by Indictment or Information

The requisites and sufficiency of an indictment or information and the proceedings based thereon are considered infra §§ 117–121.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 117. —— The Indictment or Information

Facts sufficient to constitute the commission of an indictable offense must not only be alleged, with clearness and certainty, in the indictment, but must also be proved as alleged.

The indictment must allege sufficient facts to show on its face the commission of an indictable offense,[74] and it must set out such facts with clearness and certainty.[75] It is sufficient if the offense is stated with such clearness that the jury may readily understand its nature, and defendant prepare his defense, and the court pronounce judgment according to the rights of the case.[76] Where he indictment is under a statute, it is sufficient if t follows the language of the statute,[77] unless the statute fails to define or set out the facts which constitute the offense.[78]

Allegations as to force. The allegations of the ndictment must be sufficient to show the use of that legree of force or violence which is essential to constitute the offense charged.[79] To allege that defendant entered with "force and arms" is insufficient,[80] that being the technical term employed to designate the force which the law ascribes to every common trespass,[81] but, if other words are added which import actual violence, the indictment is good.[82] Aleging the entry to have been unlawful and "with strong hand" is sufficient;[83] and, if the words are found in the statute, they should appear in the inlictment.[84] The words "with strong hand" mean something more than a mere trespass and are technically appropriate to designate the degree of force necessary to constitute the offense.[85] The necessity of setting out the particular facts constituting the force or violence used has been both asserted[86] and lenied.[87] The same allegations as to force are necessary in an indictment for a forcible detainer as for a forcible entry.[88]

Allegations as to possession or title. An indictment for a forcible entry must charge that the prosecutor was in the actual and peaceable possession of the premises at the time of the alleged offense,[89] but need not state that he was personally present.[90] Such possession, however, is all that need be alleged,[91] it being unnecessary to allege any title in the prosecutor,[92] or lack of title in defendant,[93] or to state who was the owner of the premises,[94] unless, as shown infra § 122, the indictment is brought under a statute providing for restitution which requires the prosecutor to have a certain estate or interest in the premises. In forcible detainer the indictment must allege the prior possession of the prosecutor.[95]

Description of premises. The indictment must describe the place or premises where the alleged offense was committed with certainty[96] such as will inform defendant of the specific charge which he is to meet and enable the justice or sheriff to restore the injured party to possession;[97] but certainty to a reasonable intent is all that is necessary;[98] and it seems that some less degree of certainty may be permitted in cases where the prosecution is merely to punish defendant, than where the prosecutor is also seeking to be restored to possession.[99]

Proof and variance. The offense must be established as alleged in the indictment.[1] A material variance between description of the property as laid in the indictment and the evidence is fatal.[2]

§ 118. —— Evidence

Rules of evidence obtaining in criminal cases generally are applied.

The evidence must be sufficient to establish defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.[3] The burden of proof is on the prosecution to show all the facts essential to sustain a conviction,[4] as for instance, a prior possession in the prosecutor and an unlawful detention on the part of defendant by force and with a strong hand or by menace or threats.[5]

Evidence of an assault on the person of the party in possession is admissible to show the character of the entry,[6] and evidence that the party making the entry remained in possession is admissible to show that he made his entry complete, although he is not charged with a forcible detainer.[7] Tax receipts, while not alone sufficient evidence of the prosecutor's actual possession, are admissible to strengthen other evidence of actual possession.[8] Evidence that a civil action for the same offense is pending is irrelevant and inadmissible.[9]

Evidence of title. As the title to the premises is not in issue and cannot be tried, see supra § 111 a, evidence of title is ordinarily inadmissible,[10] and cannot be introduced either to justify the force,[11] or to avoid restitution.[12] However, it has been held that, although defendant cannot justify by showing title in himself, he may controvert the facts by which the prosecutor attempts to show title in himself.[13]

§ 119. —— Trial

If the evidence is sufficient for submission to it, the jury may and should determine questions of fact and render a proper verdict.

Questions of fact are to be determined by the jury where the evidence is sufficient for submission to it.[14]

The question of possession is a mixed one of law and fact.[15]

Whether, if there is evidence of possession, that evidence is true, is a question of fact for the jury; but whether, admitting the evidence to be true, the possession shown is of such a character as will be protected against a forcible entry is a question of law for the court.[16]

Verdict. Where both forcible entry and forcible detainer are charged in the same indictment, defendant may be acquitted of one and convicted of the other,[17] as where one offense is defectively set out and the other properly, in which case defendant may be convicted of the one offense which is properly charged.[18] However, where both counts are properly charged, a general verdict of guilty is a verdict of guilty on both counts unless defendant demands a separate verdict on each count;[19] and, where the evidence fails to support either branch of the charge, a new trial should be awarded.[20]

§ 120. —— Sentence and Punishment

Such a fine as is within the statutory limit and the jurisdiction of the court may be imposed.

Where, on an appeal from proceedings before a justice, the case is tried de novo in a higher court, that court may impose any fine within the limits of the statute, although greater in amount than the justice had jurisdiction to impose.[21]

§ 121. —— Damages and Costs

Damages will not be awarded, except under statutory authority, in a criminal prosecution, nor will costs be taxed against the prosecutor unless the prosecution was frivolous or malicious.

As judicially noted, it is provided by the English statute, Statute of 31 Elizabeth c 11, that, if defendant pleads three years' possession in bar of restitution and the plea is decided against him, he shall pay such costs and damages as the judges or justices shall assess; but in no other case can damages be awarded in a criminal proceeding.[22] Where defendant is acquitted on the merits, costs cannot be taxed against the prosecutor unless the prosecution was frivolous or malicious.[23]

§ 122. Restitution and Rerestitution

Restitution of possession to the prosecutor may be awarded in a criminal prosecution for forcible entry and detainer only when it is authorized by statute and the proper proceedings to obtain it have been taken. Rerestitution of possession to defendant is not a matter of right, but may be ordered in a proper case.

In the absence of statute there can be no restitution of possession in a criminal proceeding for forcible entry and detainer,[24] and the early English statutes, Statutes of 5 Richard II c 8, 15 Richard II c 11, contained no such provision.[25] This was remedied by two later statutes, Statutes of 8 Henry VI c 9, 31 Elizabeth c 11, which provided that the injured party might be restored to possession.[26] These statutes were construed as providing for a restitution only where the prosecutor was seized of an estate of freehold,[27] but by a later statute, Statute of 21 James I c 15, the right was extended to tenants of lesser estates.[28] These statutes are in effect in some of the states.[29]

Proceedings to procure restitution. Under the statutes authorizing an award of restitution a justice cannot proceed summarily, but only by way of an inquest and with the intervention of a jury,[30] and defendant must be given notice of the inquest and an opportunity to be heard.[31] Defendant may traverse the force found by the jury, and if he does so restitution cannot be awarded until the traverse is tried and found against him by another jury.[32] The traverse need not be in writing, but may be made orally.[33]

On an indictment there can be no award of restitution after conviction unless there is an allegation in the indictment as to the prosecutor's estate or interest in the premises,[34] it being necessary to allege, for this purpose, such an estate or interest as is within the statutes providing for restitution.[35] Under a writ of restitution the sheriff is only authorized to dispossess defendant against whom there has been judgment and sentence and those claiming under him,[36] and cannot dispossess persons against whom an indictment is still pending.[37] An appeal from a conviction of forcible entry and detainer does not suspend the right of restitution.[38]

Effect of three years' possession. The statutes providing for restitution excepted from their operation cases where defendant had been in quiet possession for three years prior to the indictment.[39] Where such possession is pleaded, there can be no award of restitution until this question is tried.[40] The plea, however, is available only in bar of the award of restitution and not in bar of the prosecution.[41]

Rerestitution, as here used, is an order of court returning the premises to the party prosecuted. Where on appeal or certiorari an inquest or indictment is quashed, the court may award a rerestitution to the party dispossessed by the prior proceedings;[42] but rerestitution cannot be demanded as a matter of right, and the court will not grant it unless it appears that the party asking it has a right to the possession.[43]

FORCIBLY. By the use of force, in a forcible manner, so as to exert force.[1] When used to describe the doing of an act, the word means with force;[2] with that degree or description of force which must be exercised in order to accomplish the intended act.[3] It does not always or necessarily imply the use of physical force[4] or violence;[5] but particular acts may be said to be done forcibly where there is a mere physical contact,[6] or even a verbal remonstrance if it is accompanied by the power to deter or by threats of physical force.[7]

Depending on the circumstances, the term has been held equivalent to "violently;"[8] and also has been distinguished therefrom.[9]

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[10]

FOR COLLECTION. See the definition Collection 14 C.J.S. p 1323 notes 94-98 and the titles Banks and Banking §§ 212, 222 b and Bills and Notes § 214 c (4).

FORDA. In old records, a ford or shallow, made by damming or penning up the water.[11]

FORDAL. A butt or headland, jutting out upon other land.[12]

FORDANNO. In old European law, he who first assaulted another.[13]

FOR DEPOSIT. See Banks and Banking § 222 b notes 67, 68.

FORDIKA. In old records, grass or herbage growing on the edge or bank of dykes or ditches.[14]

FORE. In Saxon, before. In French, out.[15]

In golfing, the customary warning cry uttered by a player upon addressing himself to the ball, when others are in close proximity or in such position that they may be injured by the ball, after it is struck.[16]

FORE-AND-AFT TREE. A tree in a boundary line with chops on the sides indicating the direction of the line.[17]

FORECLOSE. To bar, or shut out;[18] to cut off, preclude, prevent, shut up, or stop;[19] to end or terminate,[20] the word presupposing the existence of something to be ended or terminated.[21] In its popular significance, to enforce by any form of legal proceeding.[22] More specifically, it is a technical term used with reference to the process of destroying a mortgagor's right or equity of redemption.[23]

a general rule when used with relation to countries in a political sense, the term refers to the jurisdiction or government of the country.[46] The term is applicable not only to countries outside of the United States, but also to the different states within the United States, as far as their relation to each other is concerned,[47] although not to the Indian nations or tribes see the C.J.S. title Indians § 9, also 31 C.J. p 485 note 3.

For references to specific uses of the word in this sense see 26 C.J. p 888 note 28 and consult Descriptive-Word Index.

It is the correlative, and frequently used as the opposite, of "domestic" see 27 C.J.S. p 1319 notes 57, 58, and, in a particular connection, is usually regarded as synonymous with "nonresident."[48]

Foreign government. A government commonly and generally known and recognized as a national government.[49] The term has been held not to include the general government of the United States in its relation to that of the several states, or a corporation created by the federal government.[50]

Foreign law. The law of a foreign country, or of a sister state;[51] the law of a foreign state or nation.[52] Under particular circumstances, it has been said that the "Laws of Moses and Israel," as used in a particular contract, are not to be considered "foreign laws,"[53] nor may the laws of the several states be so regarded in the federal courts.[54]

Foreign market. A term applied to a market located in a foreign country.[55] It has been distinguished from "home market."[56]

Foreign plea. A plea showing some other court in which the matter should be tried.[57] The term has been applied also to a plea, where the question is made between the same parties in another case, or between the creditor and a third party bound to pay the same debt;[58] and generally, where, by the pleadings, the question of satisfaction by the arrest under the capias ad satisfaciendum comes in collaterally.[59]

Foreign port. A port or place without the United States;[60] a port or place exclusively within the sovereignty of a foreign nation;[61] a port within the dominions of a foreign sovereign, and without the dominions of the United States;[62] some spot within the territory of a foreign nation.[63] The term is also used to include all maritime ports other than those of the state where the vessel belongs.[64] Specifically, it has been held that ports of the Canal Zone are to be considered "foreign ports,"[65] but that, as used in a particular statute, a "foreign port" is not any place on the high seas outside the territorial limits of the United States.[66]

The term has been distinguished from "domestic port."[67]

Foreign state. A foreign country or nation;[68] for all legal purposes the term embraces a neighboring state,[69] but not the government of the United States with reference to the state governments.[70]

In old Scotch law, a strange man or stranger; an out-dwelling man; an "unfreeman," who dwells not within the burgh.[99]

FORESAID. A term used in Scotch law as "aforesaid" is in English, and sometimes, in a plural form, "foresaids."[1]

FORESCHOKE. Forsaken, or disavowed.[2]

FORESEE. In its primary meaning, to know beforehand, to see.[3] It may sometimes be used in the sense of "to anticipate" or "to expect."[4]

Foreseen. Apprehended; considered probable.[5]

It has been distinguished from "contemplated" see 16 C.J.S. p 1525 note 98.

FORESEEABILITY. The noun from the adjective "foreseeable,"[6] expressive of the quality of being capable of being foreseen. In discussing causation, it has been said that ordinary care and prudence should not properly be considered an element of "foreseeability" which in turn is an element of "proximate cause" taken in its technical rather than in its popular sense.[7]

FORESEEABLE. Capable of being foreseen or anticipated.[8]

In the law of negligence, as descriptive of results or conditions which may give rise to constructive knowledge so as to affect a person's liability for the performance or nonperformance of an act, see the C.J.S. title Negligence § 5, also 45 C.J. p 655 note 96–p 660 note 37–99.

"Foreseeable danger" and "foreseeable risk." Phrases used to describe a condition from which an accident may reasonably be anticipated; they are broadly applicable to an accident the characteristics of which are such that it can be classified among events which, sooner or later, in the absence of due care, are likely to happen, and which due care would prevent, as, for example, dangers which are likely to arise from overcrowding on a subway platform;[9] and dangers arising from requiring a stenographer to work in proximity to a steam boiler.[10] The term does not mean that the accident itself must be foreknown, or foreseen, or that exactly such an occurrence is to be expected or apprehended.[11]

FORESHORE. That part of the land adjacent to the sea which is alternately covered and left dry by the ordinary flow of the tides,[12] that is, by the medium line between the greatest and least range of tide, spring tides and neap tides.[13] Distinguished from "beach" see Beach 10 C.J.S. p 217 in Pocket Parts. For references to specific uses see 26 C.J. p 890 note 8.

FORESIGHT. Action with reference to the future; foreknowledge.[14] The term implies ability to think and reason,[15] but not absolute foreknowledge, or that exactly such an accident as has happened was to be expected or apprehended, but rather that the characteristics of the accident are such that it can be classified among events that, without due care, are likely to occur, and that due care would prevent.[16]

FOREST. In old English law, a certain territory of wooded ground and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in the safe protection of the prince for his princely delight and pleasure, having a peculiar court and officers; a royal hunting ground which lost its peculiar character with the extinction of its courts, or when the franchise passed into the hands of a subject.[17] Also the word is used to signify a franchise or right, being the right of keeping, for the purpose of hunting, the wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, park, and warren, in a territory or precinct of woody ground or pasture set apart for the purpose.[18] In American law see the C.J.S. title Woods and Forests § 1, also 71 C.J. p 2 note 5-p 3 note 9.

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[19]

FORESTAGE or FORESTAGIUM. A duty or tribute payable to the king's foresters.[20]

FORESTALL. To intercept or obstruct a passenger on the king's highway; to beset the way of a tenant so as to prevent his coming on the premises; also, to intercept a deer on his way to the forest before he can regain it.[21]

Forestalling. Obstructing the highway; intercepting a person on the highway.[22]

As used specifically in the law of monopolies, and as therein compared with, or distinguished from, "engrossing" and "regrating," see the C.J.S. title Monopolies § 1, also 41 C.J. p 83 note 16-p 84 note 22.

FORESTALLER. In old English law, obstruction; hindrance; the offense of stopping the highway; the hindering a tenant from coming to his land; intercepting a deer before it can regain the forest; also, one who forestalls; one who commits the offense of forestalling.[23]

FORESTARIUS. In English law, a forester; an officer who takes care of the woods and forests; and similarly in Scotch law, a forester or keeper of woods.[24]

FORESTER. In old English law, a sworn officer of the forest appointed by the king's letters patent to walk the forest, watching both the vert and the venison, attaching and presenting all trespassers against them within their own bailiwick or walk.[25]

In American law see the C.J.S. title Woods and Forests § 1, also 71 C.J. p 3 notes 10, 11.

FORETHOUGHT FELONY. In Scotch law, murder committed in consequence of a previous design.[26]

FOREVER. Eternally;[27] for a limitless time or endless ages, everlastingly.[28] In devises or transfers of land, the word generally imports the creation of an estate in fee simple.[29]

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[32] Other phrases as to which more recent adjudications have not been found are listed in 26 C.J. p 890 note 17–p 891 note 33.

FORFANG. In old English law, the taking of provisions from any person in fairs or markets before the royal purveyors were served with necessaries for the sovereign. In another sense, the seizing and rescuing of stolen or strayed cattle from the hands of a thief, or of those having illegal possession of them; also the reward fixed for such rescue.[33]

N.J.—Kutschinski v. Sheffer, 158 A. 499, 500, 109 N.J.Eq. 659.

Pa.—Riggs v. New Castle, 78 A. 1037, 1038, 229 Pa. 490, 140 Am.S.R. 733.

See also Estates § 8.

Implies durability

"The word . . . 'forever' is . . . one appropriate to . . . the durability of land."—Riggs v. New Castle, supra—Landell v. Hamilton, 34 A. 663, 665, 175 Pa. 327, 34 L.R.A. 227.

As adjunct of fee simple

"The word 'forever' is almost invariably used in an instrument which creates an estate in fee simple," and "is said to be an adjunct of a fee-simple estate."—Comford v. Cantrell, 151 S.W.2d 1076, 1077, 177 Tenn. 553.

Inconsistent with estate tail

"It is the natural adjunct of a fee simple, and inconsistent with an estate tail; which, in the nature of it, is not supposed to last for ever, but to be revertible to him from whom it came."—Hall v. Vandegrift, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 374, 390.

See also the C.J.S. titles Deeds § 109 and Wills § 810, also 69 C.J. p 435 note 26.

30. La.—Sawyer v. Arnold, 1 La. Ann. 315, 316.

31. Mass.—Dennis v. Wilson, 107 Mass. 591, 593.

(1) "Forever free."—Krenz v. Nichols, 222 N.W. 300, 303, 197 Wis. 394, 62 A.L.R. 466.

(2) "Forever remain inviolate and intact."—U. S. v. Fenton, D.C.Idaho, 27 F.Supp. 816, 817.
